OFFICE OF FISK & HATCH.

BANKERS AND DEALERS IN GOV-

ERNMENT SECURITIES,

No. 5 Nassau-st., New-York,

Feb. 23, 1870.

The remarkable success which attended our negotiation of the Loans of the CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY and the WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, and the popularity and credit which these Loans have maintained in the markets, both in this country and Europe, have shown that the First Mortgage Bonds of these carefully and honestly managed Railroads are generally recognized and widely known as the most reliable, safe, and advantageous form of investment, yielding a more liberal income than can be secured from Government Bonds, and available wherever they go.

Assured that, in the selection and negotiation of an equally meritorious Loan, we are meeting a great public want, and rendering a valuable public service—both to the holders of Capital and to those great national interests of national improvement whose rapid development and substantial character mainly depend on the use of Capital and the confidence of INVESTORS—we part with special satisfaction the

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

OF THE

Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD, connecting the Atlantic coast and the magnificent harbors of the Chesapeake Bay with the Ohio River at a point of reliable navigation, and thus, with the entire railroad system and water transportation of the great West and Northwest, FORMS THE ADDITIONAL GREAT EAST AND WEST TRUNK LINE, so imperatively demanded for the accommodation of the immense and rapidly growing transportation between the Atlantic seaboard and Europe on the one hand and the great producing regions of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys on the other.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THIS ROAD AS A NEW OUTLET FROM THE WEST TO THE SEA

magnifies it into one of national consequence, and assures to it an extensive through traffic from the day of its completion; while, in the development of the extensive agricultural and mineral resources of Virginia and West Virginia, it possesses, along its own line, the elements of a large and profitable local business.

Thus the great interests, both general and local, which demand the completion of the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD to the Ohio River, afford the surest guarantee of its successful value, and Render it the Most Important and Substantial Railroad Enterprise now in Progress in this Country.

Its superiority as an East and West route, and the promise of an immense and profitable trade awaiting its completion, have drawn to it the attention and co-operation of prominent capitalists and railroad men of this City, of great judgment and known integrity, whose connection with it, together with that of eminent citizens and business men of Virginia and West Virginia, insures an energetic, honorable and successful management.

The Road is completed and in operation from Richmond to the celebrated White Sulphur Springs of West Virginia, 237 miles, and there remain but 200 miles (now partially constructed) to be completed, to carry it to the proposed terminus on the Ohio River, at or near the mouth of the Big Sandy River, 120 miles above Cincinnati and 300 miles below Pittsburg.

Lines are now projected or in progress through Ohio and Kentucky to this point, which will connect the Chesapeake and Ohio with the Entire Railroad Systems of the West and Southwest, and with the Pacific Railroad.

Its valuable franchise and superior advantages will place the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY among the richest and most powerful and trustworthy corporations of the country;

And there Exists a Present Value, in Completed Road and Work Done, Equal to the Entire Amount of the Mortgage.

The details of the Loan have been arranged with special reference of the wants of all classes of investors, and combine the various features of convenience, safety and protection against loss or fraud.

The Bonds are in denominations of $1,000, $500 and $100.

They will be issued as Coupon Bonds, payable to bearer, and may be held in this form; or

The Bond may be registered in the name of the owner, with the coupons remaining payable to bearer attached, the principal being then transferable only on the books of the Company, unless reassigned to bearer; or

The coupons may be detached and canceled, the Bond made a PERMANENT REGISTERED BOND, transferable only on the books of the Company, and the interest made payable only to the registered owner or his attorney.

The three classes OF BONDS will be known respectively as:

1. "Coupon Bonds payable to Bearer."
2. "Registered Bonds with Coupons attached."
3. "Registered Bonds with Coupons detached," and should be so designated by correspondents in specifying the class of Bonds desired.

They have THIRTY YEARS to run from January 15, 1870, with interest at six per cent per annum from Nov. 1, 1869. PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD IN THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

The interest is payable in May and November, that it may take the place of that of the earlier issues of Five-twenties, and suit the convenience of our friends who already hold Central and Western Pacific Bonds, with interest payable in January and July, and who may desire, in making additional investments, to have their interest receivable at different seasons of the year.

The Loan is secured by a mortgage upon the entire Line of Road from Richmond to the Ohio River, with the equipment and other property and appurtenances connected therewith.

A Sinking Fund of $100,000

PER ANNUM IS PROVIDED FOR THE REDEMPTION OF THE BONDS, TO TAKE EFFECT ONE YEAR AFTER THE COMPLETION OF THE ROAD.

The mortgage is for $15,000,000, of which $1,000,000 will be reserved and held in trust for the redemption of outstanding Bonds of the VIRGINIA CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, now merged in the CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO.

Quite sufficient $12,000,000 is sufficient amount will be paid to complete the Road to the Ohio River, perfect and improve the portion now in operation, and thoroughly equip the whole for a large and active traffic.

The present price is 90 and accrued interest.

A Loan so amply secured, so carefully guarded, and so certain hereafter to command a prominent place among the favorite securities in the markets both of this country and Europe, will be at once appreciated and quickly absorbed.

Very respectfully,

FISK & HATCH,

Bankers.

P. S.—We have issued pamphlets containing full particulars, statistical details, maps, &c., which will be furnished upon application.

☞ We buy and sell Government Bonds, and receive the accounts of Banks, Bankers, Corporations and others, subject to check at sight, and allow interest on daily balances.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—In the Mordaunt divorce case to-day, the PRINCE OF WALES, some of whose letters to Lady MORDAUNT have been published, was called to the witness stand. Lord PENZANCE pointed out that no witness was bound to make to any question an answer which would admit that he had been guilty of adultery. The Prince testified that he was acquainted with Lady MORDAUNT previous to her marriage; made her a wedding present; before the marriage she visited the Princess at Marlborough House; she had visited the theatre in company with the Prince and Princess; he saw her afterwards in 1866 and 1867; he had frequently met Sir CHARLES with Lady MORDAUNT; in June, 1867, he met Sir CHARLES at a pigeon match, on which occasion Lady MORDAUNT scored for both sides, and he spoke to her in the course of the match. HAVANA, Feb. 23.—The Captain-General authorizes the following statement to be made in the official journals: "Information has come into the hands of the Government confirming suspicions which have long been entertained. It is known that agents of the 'Laborantes,' or Cubans, who are not fighting in the field, but are in other ways working against Spain, have ordered their men to join the volunteer battalions here, and under cover of the uniform to perpetrate a series of assassinations on foreigners, with the object of embroiling the Government with foreign Powers. The assassination of GREENWALDTH was part of this programme. The Government expects the loyal volunteers to aid it in exposing all traitors of this class." Acting Consul-General HALL received, two weeks ago, an anonymous letter warning him that he was in danger of assassination. He notified the Captain-General of the circumstance, and paid no further attention to it. Havana is perfectly tranquil....A battalion of firemen have gone to the Cinco-Villas District to work on fortifications ....The steamer Morro Castle arrived this morning from New-York. Methodist Convention at Syracuse—Second Day.

SYRACUSE, Feb. 23.—In the Methodist State Convention to-day, Rev. Dr. PECK, of Albany, from the Committee on the subject, submitted a paper which, under the heading of "Our Position," holds as follows:

First, we propose to speak and act, not as churchmen, but as free American citizens; second, we ask no peculiar privileges for our own Church, we will concede none to any other; third, we demand equality of rights for all loyal citizens; fourth, we do not question the right of sectarian education by those who are willing to meet the expense and bear the responsibility; fifth, we insist upon equal privileges for education; for all future American citizens in common schools as a public charge; sixth, a refusal to enjoy these common school privileges furnishes no ground of exemption from equal taxation, or right to special appropriations.

Other principles are advocated in this paper, and a Methodist State Committee is to be appointed, charged with disseminating and rendering practical these principles. This Committee is to call another Convention one or two years hence. The report was adopted entire. Another Grand Erie Scheme—A Bill to Reorganize the Company—The War Over the New-York Charter—The Governor and Senate Reorganized.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 23.—Both Houses held a short session this evening, though there was scarcely a quorum in either. Among the bills introduced into the Assembly was one to reorganize the Erie Railroad Company. This bill was drawn by the counsel to the Erie Railroad, and is designed to forestall the action about to be taken by the English stock and bond holders of the Company, and to put FISK, GOULD & Co. in full possession of the road for all time to come. The intention is to buy the bill through the Legislature, as was done with the Erie legislation two years ago, and marketable members and lobbyists are in high glee at the prospect of a distribution of another half million dollars of Erie money.

THE GOVERNMENT OF NEW-YORK.

The Assembly met at 7:30 P. M.

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.

A large number of petitions for the repeal of the law appropriating money to sectarian schools were presented.

Mr. M. C. MURPHY moved that such petitions be referred to the Committee on Cities instead of the Committee on Education, as they referred to New-York.

Mr. LOWRY objected on the ground that the motion was sectarian.

Mr. M. C. MURPHY inquired whether they did not relate to the City of New-York.

Mr. LOWRY replied that it was so, but when the State was called upon to legislate on a matter it became an affair in which the whole State was interested.

Mr. FIELDS stated the provision of law referred to was a clause in the TAX LEVY, and when that TAX LEVY came up again, if the clause was left out, there would be no necessity for any legislation. He thought more consequence was given this matter than it was worth.

BILLS REPORTED.

By Mr. FIELDS—To amend the law of libel; also, amending the law to appraise lands taken for sites for district schools.

By Mr. WHANE—Providing for the reorganization of railroad companies.

THE ROCHEFORT RIOTS.

Graphic Eye-Witness' Account of the Outbreak.

After the very complete account of the two days' disturbance in Paris supplied by our correspondent and printed in the TIMES of Tuesday, no additional reports are needed. We supplement the published story, however, with a translation of M. GUSTAVE FLOURENS' summary of the earliest incidents of the outbreak, published over his signature in La Marseillaise newspaper. "On the evening of Feb. 7," says M. FLOURENS, "ROCHEFORT and I were to attend a meeting at the Marseillaise room, Rue de Flandre. I arrived at 8 o'clock. I could not believe in the arrest of our friend, our representative, whose only crime was generous indignation against an infamous murder. I announced to the citizens who did me the honor of voting me into the chair that ROCHEFORT would attend; but, hardly had our first speaker declared that we must not permit the incarceration of our representative, and drawn down on himself for these noble words a first warning from the Commissary of Police—hardly had I myself had time to protest against that warning—than a tremendous outcry from without informed us that they had dared to violate the liberty of our representative. I immediately declared to the meeting that we must consider ourselves in a state of revolution, and resort to arms of resistance. I armed myself, and immediately arrested the Commissary of Police. I told him that no harm would come to him, provided he did not attempt to escape, nor hound on his men to strike my friends. I went out into the street holding the Commissary (by his collar, I should say) above the crowd, to the cries of policemen, and we went allowed to pass, singing the "Marseillaise" and the "Chant du Depart," 'To Belleville,' I cried to my friends, a small—too small, alas!—but heroic band of youths. One hundred at first, then reduced to sixty, with which I set out. We was occupied a suburb of Paris. The Commissary told me 'Are you sure you will be able to protect me effectually? I don't care for life much, but I would think it a sad thing not to see my wife and children again.' I promised that I would see him safe, adding, 'We don't massacre unarmed people as your policemen do.' When we reached the bottom of the Faubourg du Temple, close to the canal, we stopped an omnibus; then another, and with a few hackney coaches commenced the outline of a barricade. I then requested a reliable friend to see the commissaire safe over the barricade. We then went down the faubourg, and, as two scoundrels ran off, I discharged my pistol—tenderly, like brothers. At the barracks were a sergeant and two privates. I addressed a few friendly words to them, but those wretched slaves of discipline replied by crossing bayonets and threatening to shoot us. Our friends seemed occupied at that time in barricading the lower streets, and I was almost alone. I went on, having the gas turned off all the way. When we arrived at the Rue de Paris at Belleville we built a rather better barricade than the others. We attempted to get some muskets from the Mairie de Belleville, but were unable to obtain any. We were not sufficiently numerous. Nevertheless the whole of the great artery of the faubourg was barricaded, and if we had had arms these young men would have fought heroically. We returned down the faubourg. At the moment of approaching the lower barricade I heard piercing cries. The young men of the barricade, whom the police agents were driving before them at the point of the sword. One of them, wounded by a sword, fell within four paces of me, shrieking wildly. Three agents rushed towards me. I had no arms. I was fortunate in warding off a sword-thrust with my left hand while receiving on my right shoulder a blow from a skull-cracker. Jammed up against a wall, I was evidently in for a struggle, when up came five or six other youths running as hard as they could, pursued by two agents and a peace officer. 'Run and strike,' cried the officer to the agents. 'They are armed.' They left me there standing against the wall. I continued on my way quite alone. In a side street I met a friend, who introduced me into his little workman's chamber. We had hardly got in when the street was invaded by the municipal guard, horse and foot. It was sad to see those men marching silently in the gloom, the prisoner of sleep, against their unarmed brothers and sons! At every step the horses shipped on the moist pavement. The moment they passed I came out of my hiding-place. Favored by the darkness, I was able to go up the main street of the faubourg, and observe the police agents destroying our barricades, so conscriptly improvised just before. The cavalry again came down the street, and fortunately found no one to charge. Seeing that there was nothing more to be done for the present, I followed the course of the canal, and made my way to the house of another friend. At 12:30 in the morning all was completely calm. At 4 o'clock in the morning, Tuesday, the 8th, a Commissary of Police, followed by five agents, went to arrest me at my residence, where of course they did not find me. The warrant issued against me charges me with the following four chief offences: 1. Exciting to crimes. 2. Sequestration of a Commissary of Police. 3. Exciting to revolution. 4. Setting fire to. These sentences have waited off with all my papers and correspondence wherein of course they will find nothing to compromise any one."

THE NEW QUARANTINE.

Visit of the Commissioners of Ways and Means to Westbank.

The Commissioners of Quarantine, accompanied by Messrs. Jacobs, Bergen and Banker, three of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mayor Kalbfleisch, Dr. Swinburne, Dr. Anderson and Wm. A. Cobb, ex-Quarantine Commissioners; Erastus Brooks, Messrs. Kinsela and Mones, Dr. J. M. Carnochan, J. W. Rich, Engineer and Architect of the Board of Construction, and many other gentlemen, visited yesterday Westbank Quarantine ground. The object of the trip was to show to the Committee of "Ways and Means" the extent of the work already accomplished and the necessity of its completion, for which is needed an appropriation of $400,000. The party landed first on the upper island now in course of construction, on which it is desired to locate the warehouses and buildings for the reception of cargo and passengers from infected or doubtful vessels. This island, similar to that already existing, and known as the "Lower Quarantine," cannot be completed without some pecuniary cooperation on the part of the Legislature; hence the visit. Leaving this, the party proceeded to the second or "Hospital Island;" after the inspection of which they entered the dining room of Captain O'ROURKE, who had carefully prepared a bountiful repast to assuage the keen appetites of the voyageurs.

Speeches were made by Dr. Bell, Mr. Brooks, Drs. Swinburne and Carnochan, and Messrs. Bergen, Jacobs, Kinsella and Northrop. Mr. KINSELLA, recommending the consideration of the question to the Legislature, said that "If there be anything in the State in which the Democratic Party is likely to do right, it is in the establishment and completion of this Quarantine. It will be thoroughly finished within the year, if the proper aid be given. And if, when debating on the propriety of making the emigrants' retreat to our shores more happy and free from delays through unnecessary sanitary restrictions resulting from faulty quarantine accommodations, we remember that all of us are the children of emigrants, we will not hesitate to do our utmost to build and establish these comfortable houses for the reception of the sick and those suspected of infection." Well satisfied, apparently, with their trip to and partial stay in Quarantine, the members of the party soon after the banquet returned to New-York.

Heartless Case of Desertion.

At a late hour last night a woman with an infant in her arms appeared at the Station House in Jersey City and asked for a night's lodging. She was of respectable appearance, and gave her name as CATHARINE SINCLAIR. She stated, in reply to inquiries, that she had been married to JOHN SINCLAIR, at present employe in the sugar works, for six years; that he some time since deserted his family; that she had since become much impoverished, and that she had applied for relief to her brother, residing in Sussex-street, but that he had directed her to the Station House for lodging, instead of taking her into his own apartments. This morning a warrant will issue for the arrest of the husband.

The Charges Against Dr. Swinburne.

Dr. JOHN SWINBURNE, the late Health Officer, has written a long letter to the Commissioners of Quarantine in reply to the recent charges against him. He gives documents to prove his innocence, and endeavors to explain the charges away, and to show the motives of his accusers.

Mr. Whittemore's Case in the House of Representatives.

His Resignation Tendered to the Speaker.

COMPLICITY OF OTHER MEMBERS.

Admission of the Mississippi Representatives.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The scene at the House, to-day, brought back mildly the days of impeachment. No such intense interest, or vast audience has been either felt or witnessed since that memorable occasion. Promptly at 2 o'clock the House proceeded to the consideration of the case of Mr. WHITTEMORE. It was known yesterday that General BUTLER had become so far interested in the case, that he was preparing the defence of the accused member. So to-day, when the defendant appeared to show cause at the bar of the House why he should not be expelled, he did it in the shape of a lawyer-like affidavit, prepared and submitted by BUTLER, with characteristic assurance and not a little dash and vigor. BUTLER immediately divested himself of his character as a member, and announced that he had assumed the position as counsel for the defendant, so far that he felt that he ought not to vote in the case. He sought to transform the House at once into a court of justice, and demanded the right of the accused to appear by counsel, and insisted that he should have, as he expressed it, "His God-given rights under the Constitution." This combination of audacity and impudence had the effect to throw the case into a decided muddle in which the leading lawyers of the House, POLAND, DAVIS and others, took a foggy and ineffectual part. Finally Speaker BLAINE carved his way out of the embarrassment, and rebuked BUTLER handsomely, by informing him in reply to his querulous inquiries, that the body of which he was a member was the House of Representatives, and not a Court of law; that the gentleman might denominate himself what he pleased, but the Speaker could only recognize him in his character as a member. The affidavit presented asked for a postponement and a resubmission of the case to the Military Committee, on the ground that sufficient opportunity for investigation had not been afforded the accused. Mr. WHITTEMORE having the floor, yielded his time to BUTLER, and the latter then began a defence of his client, which resulted in the greatest failure of his career as a criminal lawyer. It was notable for arrogance of manner, insolence of speech, and weakness of argument. Even LOGAN, who is a forcible speaker, but not much of a lawyer, overturned all his positions in his very effective reply. BUTLER seemed to improve the opportunity to vent his spite on the newspapers. He declared his superiority to all of them in a manner that would have done credit to a street auctioneer, and he referred to the Washington correspondents as "that vile herd which hang around Washington and telegraph lies to their papers at night." He evidently felt he had a weak case, and much sympathy was expressed for Mr. WHITTEMORE as the bad character of his defence. General LOGAN'S reply exceeded expectation, as he had shown considerable embarrassment at the outset of the case. At its close, the House rejected Judge POLAND'S resolution for further delay, by the strong vote of 39 to 135. The previous question on the resolution of expulsion was then ordered, when, at 4 o'clock, General LOGAN yielded to a motion to adjourn. The case comes up at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and after one hour's debate the final vote will be taken. There is scarcely any doubt but that Mr. WHITTEMORE will be expelled. There is much comment tonight upon BUTLER'S assertion that he appeared in the character of an attorney so far to-day that he had no right to vote. People are wondering if there was a retainer in the case, and suggestions of another investigation are not wanting. WHITTEMORE prepared his resignation to-night, and will send it to the Speaker to-morrow morning. Whether this will save him from expulsion remains to be seen. There is a question whether a member can terminate his connection with the House by his own act or not. One thing is certain, the House can bring to its bar and administer punishment to any man whomsoever, whether he be a member or not. ROUSSEAU'S resignation did not save him from a reprimand, and WHITTEMORE'S will probably not save him from judgment of expulsion.

COMPLICITY OF OTHER MEMBERS.

The Military Commission of the House to-day had another important session, and developments in the cadetship case are rumored tonight, implicating additional members, the mention of the names of some of whom causes much pain and profound sorrow. The rumors are too indefinite to print, as great injustice might thereby be done. The slippery witness, LANDON, was again before the Committee, and, it is said, made some important revelations. Another important witness was also examined whose name is withheld. General SCHEIVEN, Inspector-General of the War Department, who has charge of the West Point matters, was examined at length as to the manner of making the appointments, and as to the record of the Academy. Among other developments made to-day is the fact that President GRANT, over a year ago, while General of the army, made the discovery that this abuse existed to some degree, and that he at once recommended measures for its suppression.

ADMISSION OF MISSISSIPPI.

The President this morning signed the bill for the admission of Mississippi, and the approval was reported to the House by General FORTER shortly after 12 o'clock. Four of the members were then sworn in—Messrs. GEO. E. HARRIS, J. L. MCKEE, GEO. C. MCKEE and L. W. PERCE. The two latter took the ironclad oath, and the two former the modified oath prescribed for those whose disabilities have been removed. General ALCORN, Senator elect, this morning tendered his resignation as Lieutenant-Colonel in the regular army, which was accepted before the bill was signed. Senator WILSON shortly afterwards presented in the Senate the credentials of Senator REVELS, offering, if there was no objection, to swear him in, but Mr. SAULSBURY had an objection which he promptly stated. It was a mere technicality, to be sure, but it served the purpose of delay and impediment, which was all Mr. SAULSBURY aimed at. Mr. DRAKE, Mr. STEWART and Mr. TRUMBULL endeavored to cut the knot at once, but it was no use. The Democrats were determined to have their say on the admission of a colored man to the Senate, and they had it, subsequently, for two hours or so from Mr. GARRETT DAVIS. This gentleman redelivered the old pro-slavery, anti-negro speech, which he has been making every two or three weeks for years past. That the vote will be taken to-morrow appears doubtful, for Mr. SAULSBURY intends to speak, and there is a disposition among the Democrats to allow the admission of Mr. REVELS only when they can say no more. Mr. REVELS was on the flo

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP CALABRIA.

The Cunard steamship Calabria, which left Liverpool Feb. 12 and Queenstown Feb. 13, reached this port late Tuesday night. Her advices are later by two days than were those received by the City of Brooklyn.

The death is announced of Sir HUGH HAYES MAXWELL, Baronet, a member of a knightly family, and one of the most ancient in Scotland, one HERBERT DE MACOUSVILLE having assumed the name of MAXWELL in the time of MALCOLM IV. The deceased was the ninth Baronet, and was born in 1797. He succeeded his brother in 1865.

The Gaulois says that on Feb. 9 a meeting of 120 Hanoverian emigrants was held at Mans, at which Herr von MUNCHAUSEN presided, to discuss the point whether or not they should re-enter Prussia, accepting the new state of affairs, or emigrate to America or Algeria, the expenses of the journey being paid by the King of Hanover. Herr von MUNCHAUSEN, in his speech, informed his compatriots that after the 15th of April the subvention granted by King GEORGE would cease, and he urged the refugees to reckon after that date only upon their own personal resources, and each to act according to his own private interests.

Our correspondent in Rome points out that while the Italian Kingdom, with a population of 24,000,000 is represented in the Ecumenical Council by 120 members, and the Papal States, with a population of 720,000 by 143, France is represented by only 84 members, Austria by 45, the Germanic Confederation by 18, Great Britain by 35 and the United States by 46. The Italian members of the Council, in fact, form considerably more than a third of the whole. "An Archbishop of Paris or New-York," adds our correspondent, "may be the spokesman for the religious interests of between one and a half millions and three millions of Catholics, while the 700,000 subjects of the Pope have 143 prelates to speak for them."

The Glasgow Herald has the following interesting and reassuring extract from Mr. CHARLES LIVINGSTONE, Consul at Fernando Po, brother of Dr. LIVINGSTONE. The letter was addressed to the distinguished traveler's daughter, who resides at Hamilton: I had a note from Mr. VERDEBUNO, our Commissioner at Loando, which shows that the mendacious Portuguese are not all dead yet. It was accompanied by a letter from a Portuguese traveler to the interior, who had just returned, and gives some impressions the natives got of your father when he crossed the continent in 1854, though it adds the fact, of which your father was not aware, that he had to drink the muange, and was cut to pieces by the natives, as some of the poison showed that it had taken effect on him. Poor VERDEBUNO has sent this letter to the Foreign Office, as he thinks it leaves but little hopes of the safety of Dr. LIVINGSTONE." As the native told our Portuguese this yarn in June, 1868, it would appear that your father managed somehow to put all his pieces together again. I have written to VERDEBUNO that the muange and cutting-to-pieces part of this yarn come out of the two celebrated beds of cassila (drink made of honey). "With much secrecy," says VERDEBUNO, "the native told the Portuguese that Dr. LIVINGSTONE was a great fetish man. He talked every day with the sun—i. e., observed with the sextant, never slept in a house, and had no fear of wild beasts. He had an animal in a box to which he never gave anything to eat (chronometer), but always when he was traveling he talked to it and asked it the road—which he never asked of any one. From time to time he opened papers, and began to talk to them. He passed rivers without a canoe, and did many other wondrous things."

A conversation between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Governor of the bank was laid upon the table of the House of Commons Feb. 21, and ordered to be printed, with reference to the notice of motion regarding the national debt, standing in the name of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for the following session. Mr. LOWE, with the view of giving increased facilities to the fundholder consistently with the attainment of certain public advantages, prepared a series of proposals embracing—1, the payment of the dividends quarterly; 2, the arrangement of the Consol holders into three classes, so as to enable a twelfth part of the dividend money to be disbursed every month; 3, the formation of a stock terminable at the end of a century; 4, the conversion of New and Reduced Threes into Consols, at par, upon a payment of one-quarter per cent, by the holder, or into country stock in consideration of a bonus of ten per cent, from the Government; 5, the extinction of the various small stocks, either by purchase or conversion; and 6, the limitation of new issues, in the public funds to sums of not less than £20, all holdings below that amount to be transferred to the care of the Post Office Savings Banks. Upon receipt of these proposals the Governor of the bank took with Mr. LOWE's permission, the practical course of consulting the London bankers and a minority of the members of the Stock Exchange, when any difficulties that would have to be encountered were at once ascertained and obviated. The result was that the payment of the dividends quarterly and the consolidation of the New Three per Cents, and Reduced Threes into Consols were at once accepted to be desirable measures; while the others, for reasons stated by the Governor of the bank with great perspicuity, and the force of which seems to have been promptly recognized by Mr. LOWE, were shown to be liable to objections more or less serious. A bill was therefore to be brought in embodying the two important provisions on which all parties are agreed, and the other points were to be abandoned or reserved for further consideration.

From Our Special Correspondent.

LONDON, Tuesday, Feb. 8, 1870.

I have just received a copy of the report of the directors of the National Steamship Company of Liverpool, which is to be submitted to their shareholders at the annual meeting of the Company on the 17th inst. The report exhibits a highly prosperous condition of the Company's affairs and bears strong testimony to the fact that the steam traffic between New-York and Liverpool is a very profitable business, when it is carried on in steamships of large cargo capacity, and with the moderate working expenses which are sufficient for screw steamers of approved modern construction. The shareholders of the National received ten per cent. dividend in 1869, and the directors now propose to pay them an additional ten per cent., after carrying a large sum forward to the depreciation fund, the insurance fund and the boiler-renewal fund. I will give some of the points in the report:

"The depreciation fund shows a balance of £21,404 sterling, after providing for the alterations and rebuilding of the Louisiana, now called the Holland, amounting to £24,460, and paying for alterations and improvements in the Erin, The Queen, Holsatia and Denmark, amounting £15,822 more. The insurance account is credited with a balance of £24,424, after paying £9,261 for losses by collision, &c. The boiler renewal fund account supplied the Louisiana with new boilers, and carries a balance of next year's account. The Company has nine steamers afloat, and one, the Italy, nearly ready for launching. It also has two additional ships under contract, which are to be completed during this year. The three new additional steamers are to be larger than any of the existing ones. Now in the American trade, the directors of the National having learned by experience that large steamships are more profitable in the New-York trade than vessels of moderate size."

The great success of the National Company should teach a lesson to the shipowners of New-York, and tempt them to make a very strong effort to have the Registry laws modified in their favor. A fleet of steamers equal to the Italy can now be built for less than the first cost of the National Company's fleet, the oldest ships of which cost more and are at the same time less efficient and profitable than the later additions. Three and a half million of dollars will start a weekly line of steamers, with all the modern improvements, and fully able to compete with any steamers now in the trade between New-York and Liverpool. No subsidies are needed where the profits are so large. Fair play and the freedom of the shipbuilding yards of the Clyde and the Tyne will do more to benefit our navigation interests, and restore prosperity to shipowners and ship officers, than twenty times the amount of subsidy which Congress is likely to grant. GREAT BRITAIN.

Billiard Match for the Championship of England.

From the Times, Feb. 11.

The first regular match ever played for the championship of billiards was brought to a conclusion at about 1:45 o'clock this morning. The competitors were JOHN ROBERTS, the well-known player, and W. COOK, Jr., whose wonderful skill in billiards has been so rapidly developed. The two competitors were matched to play for £100 a side and the Champion's Challenge Cup, given by Messrs. BURROUGHES & WATTS. COX & TEMAN and THURSTON & CO. The match was played on a new table manufactured for the occasion by Messrs. COX & TEMAN, with cushions on the plan of Messrs. BURROUGHES & WATTS; and, to prevent the frequent repetition of the spot stroke, the pockets were made only three inches in the fall, which is about half an inch less than usual; and the spot was placed twelve and a half inches from the top cushion, which is half an inch higher than usual. The balls were kindly revised by the players themselves, and J. BENNETT, of St. James' Hall, was referee. The table was placed in the Hall, and seats were provided for nearly one thousand persons. Shortly before the time fixed for playing the ball became crowded, and never has such a number of persons been present at a billiard match. His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES was present, and nearly all the best amateur players. ROBERTS, who is 27 years of age, has been before the public as a noted billiard player for upwards of twenty years, and his victories over all professionals were so certain that he always had to give points averaging from 400 upwards. In 1868 he made the greatest break he ever played—viz., 346 of the balls. In October, 1868, with DUFFORD, he played a 4,000 match against C. HUGHES and BENNETT, giving them 300 in 1,000; but he and his partner were beaten easily. Shortly after the above-mentioned match he played C. HUGHES, who beat him; and in the early part of 1869 he again played HUGHES, giving him 300 in 1,000, but was beaten by six points. HUGHES making a break of 325, including 15 spot strokes. Since that time ROBERTS has not played in public until yesterday. W. COOK, Jr., is not 21 years of age, and has shown extraordinary skill with his cue, and, though so young, has made the most extraordinary breaks ever scored. In November last he played JOSEPH BERNETT a game of 1,000 up, on even terms, and won with the greatest ease by 327 points. In December, the same year, he played JOHN ROBERTS, Jr., the champion's eldest son, an even game of 1,000 up, and was beaten by ROBERTS by 92 points. In March, 1869, the same two players again contended on even terms, and COOK proved an easy winner by 228 points. In April following he played D. RICHARDS in a handicap of 800 up; RICHARDS 270, and COOK 120, were left in and had to play the game out; RICHARDS, with the game in his hands, 700, made a mistake, and COOK, who was 93 behind, scored the game off the balls with some extraordinary play, his greatest hits being 261, 259, 257, 255, 204. About 8:30 o'clock this evening ROBERTS commenced the game by a miss, and COOK followed his example. ROBERTS was the first to make a break, and quickly ran his score up to 9; COOK then scored and ROBERTS increased his score to 20, when COOK made up 20. ROBERTS then had a break; his score stood at 54, to COOK's 29; shortly after which the latter had a run, and made his score 94; ROBERTS had a break of 6, and COOK then scored 56 to ROBERTS' 65, the latter not scoring; COOK added a further 15 to his number. The play proceeded, and no very great breaks were made on either side, the play not being so good as is usually seen in important matches, owing, probably, to the size of the pockets. COOK reached his second hundred while ROBERTS was 169, and shortly afterwards COOK had a break of 25, making his score 224. At 197 ROBERTS made a five stroke, and ran up his score to 221, finishing that number with another five. At 220 ROBERTS had a small break and scored 15, at the end of which COOK went from 249 to 267. Shortly breaks followed, and 300 COOK added 21 to his number, and made 326; two short breaks succeeded this, and then COOK made another 20, his score standing 353 to ROBERTS' 322. COOK then scored 14, and was followed by ROBERTS, who made a good break of 28, making 344 to COOK's 370. The latter then added 23, and at 393 the score was COOK, 393; ROBERTS, 324. At 397 ROBERTS made a break of 12, and was followed by COOK, who ran his score up from 397 to 420, ROBERTS' score being 336. The latter then had a break of 22, and made his score 378. COOK then scored up to 440, and ROBERTS from 378 to 417. After some small breaks ROBERTS obtained his second hundred at 456, COOK's standing at 461. ROBERTS went in at 71 and made a break of 26, in the course of which he was loudly cheered for a difficult carom. COOK then run his score up from 497 to 517; and no break of any importance occurred till COOK, starting at 557, left off at 591, making this all off one ball. He then played into a hole and ROBERTS did not score; COOK then went from 589 to 625, ROBERTS being 521. COOK was loudly cheered as he passed 600. Half an hour's interval was then allowed, and play was resumed about 11:50. The play did not differ much from that of the early part of the evening, except that ROBERTS seemed to play better, while COOK seemed a little careless. COOK, when ROBERTS had reached 600, went in at 700, and made a splendid break of 18, for which he received many cheers. In this break there were several spot strokes, but it is evident that he was doubtful of them, and played up the table in preference. COOK reached 800 when ROBERTS was 608, and every one thought the match as good as over; but shortly after this, ROBERTS, by steady play, gradually lessened the gap till his score stood at 800, when COOK was at 866. At 910 COOK had a good break of 52. At 961 COOK ran up his score to 1,016, and ROBERTS directly after increased his from 663 to 682, and offers were made to back him. At 699 ROBERTS had a fine break of 36, which made his score to COOK's 1,037. When ROBERTS was 1,028 COOK was only 1,043, but shortly after he had a good break, from 1,069 to 1,108, at which there was great cheering. From this point to the finish COOK went gradually ahead, and his last break was 76, leaving his score at 1,053. The winner was received with tremendous cheering, but the march hardly proved the certainty the betting, which was two to one on him, seemed to foreshadow. The game was 1,908 up.

IMPERIAL PREROGATIVES.

Tampering with the Archives of France Denounced in the Legislature.

The French Legislative Body sat Feb. 10, M. SCHNEIDER occupying the chair.

M. MAURICE RICHARD, Minister of the Fine Arts, wished to give an answer to M. DE KERATRY relative to that gentleman's assertion that various documents had been removed from the archives. As to the pieces forming the correspondence between NAPOLEON I and his brothers, they had been demanded by Marshal VAILLANT to compare with the copies made for publication, and, after being used for that purpose, had been restored without one being kept back. As to the twenty-eight papers spoken of by M. DE KERATRY as indispensable for the history of France, but belonging to other epochs, after a careful examination, not one had been found missing. Without doubt, a great number of documents had been restored in 1815 to private families on proof being given of such papers not belonging to the nation. Also, after 1848, a great number belonging to the OLEANS family had been returned, the object of the archives being to hold more especially public papers. That restitution had been made to M. VAVIN, on the responsibility of M. DUFAURE. As to the affair of Bordigone, everything concerning it was carefully held, at nothing had been given up; but a small private memorandum book belonging to the Emperor, and of no value to any one but himself. Everything, consequently, was perfectly regular, and the Chamber could easily perceive that the Government had acted in the matter most correctly.

Count DE KERATRY would maintain that no papers much affecting the archives had been in danger of a law. A decree ought not to suffice, and if any documents had been given up under pretence of a historical work, the bona fide reason was that an interest existed to remove and destroy certain pieces concerning the BONAPARTE family, but belonging really to the history of France.

The PRESIDENT—All those observations do not belong to the question under consideration.

Count DE KERATRY—On the contrary, they are so apposite to the matter that the desire evidently is to make me dwelling longer on them. The honorable gentleman on my left has said nothing but defaming me. The Ministers perform their duties conscientiously.

M. VENDRE—The whole conduct of the Cabinet contradicts the charge thus brought against it.

Count DE KERATRY—I maintain that Prince NAPOLEON had no right to take out any documents for the correspondence of NAPOLEON I. But, at all events, this is clear; if there is a family anywhere that has endeavored to turn from their duty the heads of corps and regiments, it is that of the NAPOLEONS.

The PRESIDENT—Such language is so clearly uttered with the intention of insult that I call M. DE KERATRY to order.

Count DE KERATRY—I said nothing that is not matter of history.

M. MAURICE RICHARD—The blame just inflicted on M. DE KERATRY could very well dispense me from any reply; but I think it right to remind him of the fact that in the Legislative Body ordinary politeness ought never to be lost sight of. The honorable Minister then maintained the exactitude of the former declarations, and affirmed that the utmost regularity prevailed in everything appertaining to the archives.

The Chamber then passed to the order of the day on the incident.

New-York Liberal Club.

The New-York Liberal Club held its regular weekly meeting last evening, at No. 25 Third-avenue, Mr. HENRY WEBER, President, in the chair. Professor GEORGE BATCHELOR read an interesting paper on Polyglottism. He illustrated his subject by a diagram showing the Greek, Latin and Hebrew languages as the foundation of a liberal education, while the present necessities of the American people require the teaching of the English, German, French and Spanish languages in our public schools. The education, the Professor suggested, might be more usefully acquired by a system combining in one exercise all these four languages, so far as the definition of the different parts of speech in each language is concerned. The paper was listened to with great attention by a number of members present.

The Savannah (Ga.) Republican is found to speak a good word for SANTA ANNA. It says that he is a patriot, whatever American demagogues may say of him, and despite untoward circumstances will reach Mexico. It bids him Godspeed on this journey, and adds: "Even more, we have no hesitation in expressing the hope that he will soon be at the head of the country's deliverers, and succeed in rescuing the Government of Mexico from the blood-stained hands of the brutal TYRANT, JAUREZ."

ARTHUR W. CROSSLEY, said to be a newspaper publisher in Meriden, Conn., has been arrested in that city on the charge of forging signatures to money orders. It is alleged that he has been carrying on correspondence, under the name of "Alice Crosby," with young men in the far West who answered "matrimonial" advertisements, and, after a few letters had passed, had been induced to send "Alice" money to pay the expense incurred in traveling to the victim's home in order that they might be united in marriage.

General SHERIDAN himself says of the horse which he rode at Winchester: "Rienzi was given me by the late Colonel CAMPBELL, of the Second Michigan Cavalry, at Rienzi, Miss., (whence his name,) in July, 1862. At that time he was rising three years old, and gave promise of great strength and vigor. I always regarded him as having been presented by Colonel CAMPBELL on behalf of his regiment, notwithstanding the fact that Colonel CAMPBELL was said to have owned him personally. He is a thoroughbred Black Hawk, has but two white spots upon him, one on the forehead and one upon his right hind pastern."

The Recent Action of Justice Buckley in Relenting the Swill Milk Dealers to be Investigated.

The extraordinary and unprecedented action of Police Justice BUCKLEY, of Brooklyn, on Monday last, in releasing the proprietors of the "swill milk" establishments who were brought before him for trial, on the grounds, as he stated, "that there was no public prosecutor present," although Mr. BERGH, President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, was in Court at the time, and exhibited his authority derived from the District-Attorney of Kings County, to act in that capacity, has created a storm of indignation that will not be assuaged soon. Justice WALSH only last week discharged the fifteen cock-fighters on straw bail, although they were arrested with their game fowls in the pits, and the officers who effected the arrests were in the Court room waiting to give their testimony.

Yesterday morning the Grand Jury of Kings County held a special meeting in their rooms at the Court House, and Mr. HENRY BERGH was called upon for his explanation of Justice BUCKLEY's mode of expounding the law, and it is intimated that the jury, from his testimony and the evidence already in their possession, will present a strong document to the Legislature recommending the impeachment of this Justice, as well as that of another whose decisions lately in dog and cock fighting cases have rendered him such a favorite with the thieves and blackleg of New-York and Brooklyn. District-Attorney MORGAN, of Kings County, although surrounded by a cordon of Democratic leaders, has received to wash the dirty to the wall. [illegible] Grand Jury [illegible] that they will [illegible] the Grand Jury [illegible] that they will [illegible] to-day will be a day of reckoning, and that next Friday and we see the only principles left.

REYNOLDS SENTENCED.

Judge Engelhardt's Address to the Prisoner—Improvidentability of the Letter—The 8th of April to be the Day of Execution.

A vast crowd of people again besieged the doors of the Court of Oyer and Terminer yesterday morning. The conviction of REYNOLDS and the knowledge that the death sentence was to be passed upon him at the approaching session had attracted this vast and various appearing assemblage, who with great difficulty were prevented from overflowing the Court room. At the appointed hour Judge INGRAHAM took his seat upon the bench and the prisoner having been brought in a solemn pause came to make the same more impressive. REYNOLDS cool, calm, imperturbable, stood as he had done ever since the commencement of his trial. A sign from Mr. VANDEVOORT, Clerk of the Court, the Sheriff caused the condemned to rise, when Mr. VANDEVOORT asked him if he had anything to say why the judgment of the law should not be passed upon him. The prisoner in a low tone muttered something to the effect that he did not know how the case had gone. Judge INGRAHAM then arose and addressed the condemned:

JOHN REYNOLDS, you have been found guilty of the crime of murder. The evidence shows you had no excuse for it. You first went into one place and took a knife, concealed it and carried it away. You kept that knife concealed until you found WILLIAM TOWNSEND, in his own house, among his own children, no one else being present. What passed between you and the house was we do not know, but there is some suspicion that it was with a view and for the purpose of committing wrong and improper acts. You have been tried by a jury of very intelligent men, who have given your case a thorough examination. They have listened attentively to the testimony and have agreed that you are guilty. With that verdict the Court does not at all differ. The murder, a cruel one on your part, was entirely unprovoked, and there is nothing to excuse or justify it, so far as we have had any proof before us.

PRISONER (vacantly)—I don't know anything about the matter.

Judge INGRAHAM—I know you say so, but your conduct shows you did know what you were doing, and were aware of the act you committed. You may have been excited by liquor, but that does not excuse you. You may have been drinking before you committed this act; but if a man who is allowed to indulge in drink and then kills his fellow-man be excused on account of drink, persons who commit such acts will never be punished, for they might seek the same excuse. The law does not excuse you. The law holds you responsible, and it have no other duty left with me now than to pronounce upon you the sentence of the law. It is not the sentence of the Court. The law makes your life forfeit for having taken the life of another. Now, I advise you before pronouncing that sentence to lay aside any hope that you may get it altered or extended. Your character for offence, as well as a great number of offences of a similar kind perpetrated continually in this City, calls for the execution of the law not only in your case, but in other cases, and that the offenders be convicted as you have been. Instead of looking for hope, I urge you to prepare yourselves for the event that will take place. When the time comes that will be fixed for the execution of your sentence you will be executed, and you will pass from this world into another. Meanwhile you have an opportunity afforded you to prepare for that event. It is not for me to say to you what is the preparation. I advise you, therefore, to lay aside the hope of getting pardoned and to seek for that preparation which is necessary before the time comes for your execution. The sentence of the Court is, that you be carried hence to the prison from which you have been brought, and there be kept in close confinement until the 8th day of April, and that on that day you be hanged by the neck until you are dead, between 8 o'clock in the morning and two o'clock in the afternoon. May God have mercy on your soul.

As the last word left his lip the prisoner sat down, still apparently unaffected by the dreadful condition in which he was placed. His demeanor was such that he left the impression upon observers that he was playing a part, and was really unconscious of all that had happened. After a moment he was removed from the Court room by the Sheriff, and again the crowd, as soon as at liberty, rushed wildly after the doomed man, but he escaped them as before, and in ten minutes was placed in the condemned cell in the Tombs, which he is only to leave to ascend the gallows.

THE ADDINGTON WILL.

An Effort to Prove the Testator Insane in Consequence of His Religious Belief and Practice—A Curious Case.

Several days ago we published some of the proceedings before Surrogate HUTCHINGS in the matter of the contesting of the will of RICHARD DRYDEN ADDINGTON. The following appears to be the real state of the case, according to the testimony: In April, 1869, Mr. ADDINGTON made a will, bequeathing his entire estate to his executor, ALBERT DAY, of this City, in trust for the Cooper Union. His infant son, WILLIAM WEED, (bearing the maiden name of his mother instead of his father's name, in consequence of differences arising between his parents,) by his guardian, contests the will on the ground of insanity, and seeks to show that on account of a disappointment in love with a fascinating widow, the mind of the testator took a peculiar religious turn, and he was thereby led to give up his business as a life insurance agent.

A witness for the contestant testified that the deceased told him that a ray of light struck him, penetrated his skull and entered his brain, and that at that moment he became a component part of God, and placed him in the same state in which Elijah was when translated and St. Paul at his remarkable conversion.

The deceased believed his conversion similar to St. Paul's, that is, by the agency of light, and declared that, "Without God he did not live, the direction and guidance of God." He thought it was sinful to do business while he had enough of this world's goods, and "believed himself to be a trustee of God in the disposition of his property." The witness thought it indicated a very peculiar state of mind to ask God's direction, as the deceased asked Him, and he differed from the deceased in regard to becoming a part of God here upon earth, and did not believe that God would be very apt to answer in regard to spiritual wants, and in regard to the meat and drink of a person, when the advice was asked in relation to the same.

Although the witness said he was aware that the Testament taught: "That whatever you do, whether you eat or drink, you do all to the glory of God," he considered the testator peculiar in following such precepts; he also differed from him in regard to God's revealing to him the hours of their conduct here upon earth, and that a person being baptized with a ray of light became a part of God, and in the rule and government which God had over Mr. ADDINGTON; that he did not believe "that man can communicate with Him at any time, and be governed in his actions here upon earth," as the testator believed.

Upon being asked by the executor whether it was considered by him to be "any more peculiar that a ray of light should strike a man in this age than in the age of St. Paul," the witness replied: "I do not believe in miracles at any time, and thought that God had no need of those agencies in this time; and in answer to the question how he determined that, witness replied, "I suppose as every one has—they have a conscience given them by God." The counsel objected to the extent of the witness's question, "Do you know the purposes of God so that you can determine that it is not essential now to do those things?" The Surrogate sustained the objection, and witness was not permitted to disclose his knowledge of God's purposes in connection with this case. On the 24th of January, 1869, the Circuit Court of Rockingham, Va., decreed that the "testator and his wife be divorced from the bonds of matrimony, and that neither of them shall by virtue of the relation heretofore existing between them have any right to a claim upon the person of the other or the estate to which the other may now or hereafter be entitled," and Mrs. ADDINGTON, by her counsel, accepted $2,500 in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims she then had or might hereafter have upon her husband or against his estate for the maintenance of herself and her infant child.

Murderous Assault upon a Police Officer.

JACOB HAHN, while acting in a disorderly manner yesterday in the First Ward, was ordered to desist by Officer JOHN L. LOCKWOOD, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct. HAHN resisted arrest and presenting a loaded pistol at the breast of the patrolman, pulled the trigger. The intended murderer was thwarted in his purpose, however, for the cap failed to explode the charge. HAHN was arrested, and on being arraigned before Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs, was fully committed for trial, in default of bail. HAHN belongs to that notorious gang of street ruffians who infest the Ninth Ward, and render the neighborhood in all times quite unsafe and disorderly. It is this lawless gang that claims for a leader the murderer of ARCHIBALD DONOHUE, THOMAS JACKSON, a Deputy Sheriff, now lying in the Tombs awaiting trial. Ever since the incipient riot in Washington-street in July last, when Officer CAMPBELL shot MORRIS LOWE, and was subsequently acquitted of the charge of murder, the desperadoes of the First Ward have evinced a determination to wage war upon the Police, and apparently lose no opportunity to [illegible] while [illegible] day.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

Views of the Merchants' Association Protection for the Ballot in this City, the One Thing Needful.

The following letter, addressed to the members of both branches of the Legislature, was sent to Albany yesterday by the Citizens' Association of this City:

THE CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW-YORK,
NO. 102 BROADWAY, Feb. 21, 1870.

To the Honorable the Members of the Senate and Assembly of the State of New-York:

Gentlemen—The Association, organized for examining the local annual expenditures of the City of New-York generally or in part in its control, and which continues its vigilance in that direction, and whose members actively engage teams to attend your sessions, desire to call your attention to this subject, which they believe should take the entire time of the legislature and more.

The evils under which New-York City suffers at this time are not so much in actual contemplation of acts of honest dishonest, or perversion for the ballot. It is a fact that the honest voters of our City have at last been awakened to a sense of their duty, and that they have at last been made fully conscious of the plan laid and those who are planning to the property of our City arrive at power. This is one which may the Legislature in other hands, in order to prevent such action, which we think can be done through the Commissioners, who should be appointed by the Governor, by which honorable gentlemen, of both parties, may be selected in each Ward, upon the Polls, Health and Fire Departments, who, in their respective districts, control the appointment of City officers.

Many instances of fraud occurred in our City on the last fifteen Polls, there would have been no money for the establishment of State Commissions.

All classes of our citizens would have been enabled to try by an honest ballot for the control of affairs. Could a citizen (to use the expressive language of one of the foremost champions of voters) but sure that "his vote counted one, and that his neighbor's vote counted one as well," than the ballot, as it should be, would truly express the actual opinions of the voters, that there would be no fraudulent material, no fraudulent counting, no stuffing of the ballot boxes, no deliberate counting of false and fraudulent canvassing, then there would be no need to appeal to the inherent power of the people for that protection which should flow through the channels of a moral government. As a matter of expediency, it would be more harmonious to see their powers in hand; but the assembly must be the servant and not the master, and, in order to secure safety to life, property and health.

When the Legislature gives us a pure ballot, a vigilant protected to protect the vote and prevent tumult and outrage, then our Legislature, by a vote of ratifying local powers in local hands. The voters of New-York will destroy good government and will vote for honest men, even if the majority; once give them a chance to vote for honest men.

Elections of bad men are only effected because the minority, desperate for gain or evil, exercise a terrorism over the peaceable and keep the election to themselves.

It is pretty well understood that a very large number of the votes cast are fictitious—the majorities exist only on paper, and the enormous which control are exercised by those who use force and fraud, thus oppressing both labor and capital.

Before concluding the thoughts of reorganizing our City Government, therefore, the purity of the ballot should be secured.

The Association once attempts made in various directions to alter the election laws, but believes it seen in them only the efforts of local politicians to gain personal advantage.

No inspectors or canvassers of election should be chosen except by a more remote power, wholly removed from the influences and quarrels of the districts. Inspectors should be appointed by the Governor, and, above all, should be equally divided between the chief political parties of our State. A system of registry should be adopted, such as will give ample opportunity to every voter to register his name, and, on September of each year, unalterable until the succeeding year, would give two months before election to detect fraudulent registries, and would prevent the attempt to register on the day of election.

This registry should be opened for one month at Police headquarters, and every man who desired to vote at the coming election would attend to be registered, whether a district has contested or not, and vote, notwithstanding removals; (this would break up politics, combinations to distribute.) At the time of registry a description of his height, age and occupation, and the number of his house, would be entered on the register; this would prevent any voters voting on his name, as now practiced, and would assist in the detection of fraudulent registries. A certificate of the registry, which should be given to each voter, to be presented at the polls, to entitle him to have his vote received.

The simplest protection should be extended to all challenges of fraudulent votes. The canvassers and inspectors should not be elected because they are not strictly representative officers; they should be appointed and sworn, unless duly published, so as to be known to the public, and, if they should be found of good standing, they would have a just sense of the responsibility of their position.

When the purity of our local elections becomes a fact, the Legislature will find our local governments may be safely properly carried out. The Association has for several years, most cordially approved of the belief that good reorganization is needed, and has stated that the Legislature, in its wisdom, will secure a Metropolitan Government in the City of New-York, subject to the Government of the State of New-York, subject to the Constitutional Convention, on the 3d day of August, 1869, by the Citizens' Association, the following suggestions were made which can now be adopted, if the Legislature shall so vote:

First—The Mayor of this City should have the power to appoint the heads of the chief boards and departments of the local government.

Second—The Mayor should have power to remove for cause the Commissioners or local officers of all boards and departments established in the City of New-York, or in districts including said City, and all other officers in said City, or districts appointed by the Governor or Legislature, copies to accompany the given to each commissioner.

Third—The Mayor should have power to appoint and remove the Corporation Counsel.

Fourth—The Comptroller should hold office for six years. The commissioners and boards established by the Legislature in the City of New-York, or in districts embracing the same, should make quarterly reports to the Mayor and Comptroller.

Fifth—A veto or resolution of senators, by the Common Council, upon any commission or board should necessitate an investigation into the affairs of such commission or board.

Sixth—There should be created in the City of New-York a Department so inaugurate and maintain a system of wharves and piers commensurate with the wants of the City of New-York.

Seventh—There should be created in the City of New-York a Department or Board of Public Works, into which should be consolidated the Street Department and Commissioners of Assessments, and which shall have the exclusive construction, custody and care of all public works in said City, except the wharves and piers.

Eighth—The existing checks in the Charter upon corrupt legislation should be retained.

Ninth—The Mayor should possess an absolute veto power over the ordinances and resolutions of the Common Council.

Tenth—No donations of the public funds should be made by the Common Council, and all ordinances and resolutions involving, directly or indirectly, the expenditure of money, or the disposition of the public property, should require the votes of three-fourths of the members elected to each Board of the Common Council, but no ordinance or resolution passed by one Board shall be adopted by the other Board "before five days have elapsed after its passage."

Eleventh—Impeachment of the Mayor and all local officers for misconduct in office.

The following suggestions for the reorganization of our City Government were carefully considered, and were subscribed to and presented and the date named, (Aug. 27, 1867,) to the Constitutional Convention by the following Committee of the Association:

James Brown, Charles Tracy, Benj. Wright, Horatio Allen, Jas. Bowman, Gustavus Schwab, Edwin Hoyt, Theodore W. Riley, Murray Hoffman, Philip Hone, Jas. Lenox, Jas. Boorman, J. Prescott, Nathaniel Sands, James Lenox, William Parker, Robert Colgate, Geo. F. Noyes, Wm. H. Fogg, J. D. Lester, Seth N. Hunt, Andrew J. Stacey, Benj. D. Silliman, Geo. Griswold, Alex. Hamilton, Jr., Wm. H. Falle, John Taylor Johnston, Paul N. Spofford, John E. Williams, Wm. Wood, James M. Constable, Moses G. Baldwin, Samuel S. Constant, Peter Mailey, Joseph J. Cowperthwaite, Jas. Lenox, Wm. Allen Butler, Stewart L. Woodford, Wm. F. Cary, David Stewart, Wm. Orthout.

The Association intended by the above plan to secure—

First—Responsibility on the part of the Mayor for the appointment and continuance in office of any local officer who was under him.

Second—To secure the lowest possible taxation of every kind.

Third—To secure a new wharf and pier system, to improve our harbor, and increase the business and prosperity of our City.

Fourth—To consolidate two independent departments into one Board of Public Works.

The Association saw no reason to alter materially the plan, providing the election of the local officers who should be responsible to the people, should be fairly and honestly conducted under a stringent election law. Without this there can be no expectation of good government.

There are several matters of great importance connected with a proposed system of local government upon which the Association has not touched. For instance, the mode of the arrangement of our Governor and the Legislature, whether the Governor should sit on and of office at the same time, thus giving the people at every recurring election, the power of thoroughly changing the administration of the Government.

In the hope that these few words may procure some relief for our people from the evils under which they suffer, they are respectfully submitted.

President Citizens' Association of New-York.

The declaration was received with cheers by the spectators.... A Paris dispatch says that Don CARLOS was arrested at Lyons while traveling in the South of France in violation of one of the conditions of his permission to remain in France. He was escorted to the Swiss frontier. Before his arrest, it is said, he had met the Duke of MODENA and made arrangements for another rising in Spain.... A reception was held on the 22d, at the residence of the American Minister in Paris. ....Hon. ANSON BURLINGAME died yesterday in St. Petersburg, after an illness of four days.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate yesterday petitions for woman's suffrage were presented by Messrs. POMEROY and ANTHONY. The bill establishing a territorial form of government in Alaska was reported from Committee. A resolution was offered by Mr. SPRAGUE looking to the abolition of the military school at West Point and the naval school at Annapolis. A message of the President vetoing the bill for the extension of the White pistol patent, was discussed at some length, and the bill finally laid aside. The credentials of H. R. REVELS, the colored Senator elect from Mississippi, were presented by Mr. WILSON, and a long debate ensued upon the question of their regularity. The paper was finally received, and a discussion then took place upon the reference to Committee. Pending the debate and without deciding the question the Senate, at 5 P. M., adjourned.

In the House, immediately after the reading of the journal, the intelligence of the death of Hon. ANSON BURLINGAME was received, and Mr. BANKS made a brief speech in allusion to the unexpected event. Four of the members elect from Mississippi took the oaths of office. Several bills and resolutions were introduced and petitions presented, after which the bill for the punishment of polygamy in Utah was again taken up, and discussed until the expiration of the morning hour. The House then, in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the legislative appropriations until 3 P. M., at which time the case of Mr. WHITTEMORE, charged with selling cadetships, was taken up, in accordance with the resolution of Monday. Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, appeared as his counsel, and urged a postponement until the final report of the Committee. A number of points of order were raised, and a long discussion ensued. A resolution, offered by Mr. POLAND, to postpone action, was rejected by a vote of 99 to 155; and then, after some further discussion, and a request of WHITTEMORE himself, final action was deferred until to-day. At 5 P. M. the House adjourned.

GENERAL.

The State Legislature held short sessions of both branches last night, but there was little business done. Among the bills introduced was one to reorganize the Erie Railroad Company.

A dispatch was recently received by the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland from the British Colonial Secretary informing him of the intention to withdraw all the troops in the colony, and leave it to the protection of the Dominion of Canada, should it join the Confederation.

A desperate fight occurred in January last between bands of Sioux and Crow Indians, numbering about 300, on the Yellow Stone River. All the Crows engaged were killed in hand to hand fights. The Sioux lost seventeen.

The President yesterday signed the bill to admit Mississippi to representation in Congress. Four Representatives were sworn in, two of whom had been officers in the Union army and two in the rebel service. General BARRY, the Representative elect from the Third District, is absent in consequence of wounds received in an affray during the canvass.

Our Revenue Laws—The True Basis of Reform.

The population of the United States increases at a rate exceeding 1,000,000 annually—the annual rate of such increase being fully three per centum. The increase of our productive capacity, from the progress of our railroads in opening up to markets every portion of the wide domain, and from that made in the mechanic arts, which in all departments of industry are constantly substituting contrivances which either abridge or wholly supersede manual labor, is in tenfold greater ratio. If, therefore, the taxes of to-day suffice for the wants of government, those of to-morrow, upon a similar basis, will certainly be in excess of those wants. Such is the strength of our situation that the duty imposed upon the statesman and legislator is not to contrive new taxes or an increase of them, but a reduction, both in number and amount. Nor do we, upon this hypothesis, impair in any degree our public credit, as we may largely decrease the rate of taxation without diminishing the amount of revenue collected.

It would be easy to reduce this general proposition to a mathematical formula. At the present time our population equals 39,000,000. In 1880 it will equal 50,000,000. If we estimate the value of our products to equal $300 per head at the present time, we may safely increase such value to $450 per head at the close of the present decade. At the former rate, the value of our products the present year will be $11,700,000,000; in 1880, at the assumed rate of increase, it will be $22,400,000,000, or twice greater. Now, such an estimated rate of increase, enormous as it is, will not exceed that of the last two decades. We are not likely in the future to proceed at a slower rate than in the past. But we may abate something of our estimates without impairing in any degree the force of the illustration. We may therefore safely set about a reduction in the rates of taxation, even if we do not propose any reduction in the amount of revenues to be collected. But may we not largely reduce the amount? The public revenues the present year are likely to exceed by $100,000,000 the current expenditures of the Government including the interest on the public debt. We may set apart $50,000,000 annually, to the payment of the principal of this debt, and still take off $50,000,000 of taxes from some of our industries or articles of consumption. The questions to be considered, consequently, are—Upon what rules or principles shall we proceed in making such reduction; and what articles or processes can we relieve from taxation, with the least injury to the revenue and with the greatest advantage to the general welfare?

It is an axiom in raising a revenue that taxes should be levied upon results rather than upon processes—upon articles fitted for consumption, rather than upon the ingredients of which they are composed. We should not tax a process, because such process may not turn out to profit; and we should by no means discourage industry and enterprise. We should not tax the steam or the water that turns the wheel, but the product that results. We should not tax the tools which the farmer or mechanic uses, nor the materials of which they are composed. We should not levy a tax upon the construction of a railway, as it is shown that such a work adds five times its cost to the aggregate value of the property of the community through which it runs. A tax levied upon its stocks will produce five times as much, in a single year as one, no matter how onerous, levied upon the materials that went into its construction.

In levying taxes, then, we should lighten the burdens upon all processes, and all articles that lie at the basis of our industries. The chief of these articles are coal, iron and steel. Coal is the great source of power, not only in the mechanic arts but in commerce. In such ratio as we tax it do we interfere injuriously with production and distribution, so that while we gain one dollar from the tax we may lose a hundred in the results that are defeated thereby. We have only to refer to the experience of the past year to see how enormous were the losses resulting from the monopoly of the supply of coal possessed by a comparatively small district and few persons. The price of the article was run up to twice its cost. The excess of price was a tax which our Revenue laws allowed a small portion of the community to levy upon the whole nation, without any compensating advantages in return.

It is with iron and steel as with coal. They are always a means to an end—seldom or never an end in themselves. They are then the tools and instruments of industry. We should not tax the plow nor the reaper of the farmer, but his well-filled granaries; we should not tax the spindles or looms of the manufacturers; we should not tax the materials that enter into the construction of ships. We have a most pregnant illustration of the effects of such taxation. It is notorious that ships can be built by our commercial rivals at one-third less cost than by ourselves. A decayed and decaying commerce is the result—a commerce which we are seeking to restore by expedients as false as was the policy that destroyed it. The true way to restore it is to relieve it of all burdens but cost. If it will not thrive under such a régime, we can then turn our industry in other directions.

In every system of taxation processes should wholly be free. Coal should be free, from economic as well as humanitarian considerations. Duties upon coal, iron, steel, wool and lumber—in fact, upon all articles that form the basis of our industries—should be only incidentally protective. The requirements of the revenue are a guarantee that even incidental protection will be ample for the legitimate purposes of the interests involved. No domestic interest will be likely to suffer under any rate we may adopt, as our necessities will compel us for a long time to tax heavily all articles entering into general consumption. But upon many varieties of those named we are paying nearly cent per cent upon their cost. Such rates we can largely reduce, without injury to any domestic interests, with an increase of revenue, and to the great advantage of every department of industry. Taxes on imports should be levied as far as possible upon articles which, when received, are fitted for immediate consumption. No taxes that can be levied will oppress so little as these. They are levied upon articles at their highest value, and consequently produce a large revenue. They do not injuriously interfere with domestic industry. They are easily and cheaply collected, and involve few opportunities for fraud. They are generally paid for in small sums, and out of accumulated earnings, and consequently are never felt to be oppressive. In levying taxes upon such articles it is something that we have the experience of other nations, certainly as wise as ourselves in these matters, as our guide.

Such, it appears to us, are the views which should control us in dealing with our present Revenue laws. We have now a revenue in excess of our wants. We are adding a million yearly to the number of our taxpayers. These are increasing in much more rapid ratio their ability to produce and consume. We can therefore greatly relieve the burdens of taxation without reducing the revenues. But we can largely reduce them at the same time that we can provide for their more equitable adjustment. In the emergency of the war we taxed indiscriminately and without wisdom. The proposition for a large increase at the present time, and in the same direction as the past, is utterly absurd and preposterous. It is made in the interests of cliques and monopolies, who find their chief employment and support, not in patient and economic industry, but in excessive prices, to be secured to them by legislation at Washington. But the day for such things is past. The people are now coming in for their share of attention. They have borne patiently their burdens, and demanded no measures of relief till the position of the Government and of its credit were fully assured. They now demand that these taxes shall be adapted to a reduced scale of expenditures, including the annual payment of an installment of the public debt, and that they be so distributed as not to discriminate in favor of one class to the injury of another—that they shall be no longer oppressive to our industries, nor costly nor burdensome in their collection.

Reorganizing the Local Government.

Up to this time the quarrel in the Legislature over the reorganization of the local Government of the City of New-York has been confined to the factions of the Democratic Party. The leaders of the ballot-box stuffers and repeating gangs have monopolized the subject of municipal government, and our citizens,—those who earn the money which pays the taxes that keep these gentlemen in affluent circumstances,—have looked on at the fight with considerable amusement. It seems never to have entered the heads of the Democratic Senators and Assemblymen, who are so coolly proceeding to "abolish" the Commissions, to "abolish" the Excise law, and to "reorganize" the City Government, that the citizens who pay the taxes, the respectable workers of our community, have something to say about this "abolishing" and "reorganizing"—that they do not recognize Mr. GENET nor Mr. NORTON, nor any of the ward politicians, as their representatives or leaders,—that our citizens are rather of the opinion that the struggles and rebellions and manœuvres of these gentlemen are not intended so much to benefit the City as to benefit themselves,—and that no good for our people can come from the identical gang who have made the "party" name stink so notoriously in the nostrils of the honest people of this City.

The address which we publish to-day from the Citizens' Association to the Legislature, shows that before any of this "abolishing" and "reorganizing" is attempted, a long and bitter contest will be waged by a third party, the taxpayers of New-York, by their agents, the Citizens' Association. The first demand made by this power is one that will strike at the very heart of the gallant Democrats who are assuming sovereign sway in the Legislature. It is an election law to prevent frauds upon the ballot! This is demanded as an indispensable condition before any intermeddling with the present condition of our City Government. After such a reform is effected, then amend the charter and welcome.

We confess we are sorry for our Democratic reorganizers of the Legislature. It is too hard to ask them to give a proof of their honesty before they are trusted with our Police, our Health and our Fire Departments. Why, where would they have been now, if we had had pure elections? Cut off their repeaters and fraudulent voters, and where will they be at the next election? But, nevertheless, the demand is just and must be acceded to. The Citizens' Association has struck the key-note which we have always urged as the very foundation of harmony in our City Administration: First, pure elections, and then reorganization. Protect the ballot before you are trusted with the money bags of the City, gentlemen Senators. Let us know that "one vote shall count one, and no man's vote count more than one," and we will allow our local rulers to have the powers we have taken from them. Dismiss your hired gang of repeaters, withdraw your subsidies from the corner liquor shops, send your thieves to jail, hang your murderers, and the people will trust you,—not before.

The Death of Burlingame.

It is sad enough to feel that a great statesman lies dead in the foreign capital of Russia. What an evidence of the vanity of human wishes in the spectacle of this splendid Embassy, representing the oldest and most populous Government of the world—entering upon the hospitalities of welcoming Russia, only to find its illustrious chief stricken with death! It was from Russia that ANSON BURLINGAME expected his warmest welcome. England with its harsh traditions, its sympathy with reaction, its remembrance of opium wars, and the stern policy of PALMERSTON, he feared would be hostile. The NAPOLEON of France was the NAPOLEON whose soldiers had pillaged the Summer palace and carried desolation into Pekin, and his colleagues could scarcely be expected to greet with enthusiasm the ruler who had brought disaster upon the sacred Emperor. Russia had always been the friend of liberal China. The interests of the Autocrat were nearly allied with those of their Emperor.

ANSON BURLINGAME was still a young man. He seemed to have many years of usefulness before him,—as he was not yet 50 years of age. Those who looked upon his lusty frame, vigorous and comely and gentle, with all the graces of manly pride, and full of strenuous energy and helpfulness,—with his massive fertile brain,—his genial, winning, enthusiastic temperament,—his hearty, frank, genuine nature,—almost boyish in its elasticity,—his capacity for work which, when excited, was beyond that generally given to man,—felt that he was but at the outset of a career which would rank him with the statesmen of the world, and open the way to the highest honors of the Republic. He died the Minister of a foreign Power. He was its self-denying, patient and resolute servant. He loved China as fondly as though the blood of the Mongolian ran in his veins. He was proud of the country he served, and of the mission to which he had been assigned. We, however, prefer to remember him as our brother and friend. And now that he comes back to us, not as the triumphant Ambassador of a cause which was dear to America and humanity, but cold and dead, to rest forever in the land he loved so well, we shall receive him as a son worthy of the highest honor—one who did his work well, and whose death, considering our relations with China, must be regarded as a calamity to America and mankind.

Mr. BURLINGAME came into public life in the exciting days of FREMONT and BUCHANAN. A son of New-York, he had spent his early days in the Western countries, and learned his first lessons of diplomacy in dealing with the Indian tribes. In this romantic school his character was formed. It combined the culture and finish of the East with the liberality,—the manliness,—the natural heartiness of the West. In common with LINCOLN and DOUGLAS and CONWIN,—he exhibited a rare fund of wit and eloquence and humor. He was insensible to fear. When a South Carolina fire-eater struck down a Senator of Massachusetts he denounced him as a coward and a ruffian. When he was called to account he replied that he would go to Canada and fight his opponent with rifles. We all remember—for this was but fourteen years ago—what a profound sensation his plucky defiance created. We had seen so much of the gasconading South,—we had suffered so many humiliations from the unrestrained violence of Southern men,—we were so weary with yielding, dough-faced representatives, that the spectacle of one man,—and he a Congressman from placid, patient, unresisting, God-fearing New-England,—willing to go down into the dueling ground and meet the gasconading Southerner, quite won the national heart, especially the young men. This one act made ANSON BURLINGAME the most popular man in the Republican Party, and in that great Fremont campaign he carried us away by storm. Well, since then, we have had enough of rifles and war—quite enough for many a century, we trust—and whatever differences may come again, the question of courage will never be mooted between the men whose fathers and brothers fought in the slopes of Gettysburg.

It was the impetuous sympathy of the young statesman with Sardinia, as expressed in a rough, little speech against the tyranny of Austria, that led to his being recalled from the American mission. The news came to him at Paris, when on his way to the Vienna Court. It was a sore disappointment, for his heart yearned for the enlightened, bright and venerable capital of Lower Germany. Still, it was not so ordained, and with reluctant footsteps he passed on to his duty at the other end of the world. How wonderfully God rules the destinies of all of us, and how all life shows that the disappointments of to-day are frequently the opportunities and blessings of to-morrow! So it proved to ANSON BURLINGAME. He was of all men fitted for the mission to China. He was young, liberal, brave, in active sympathy with free institutions, quick to learn and help; and when he came to see the mysterious, far-removed China, with its strange customs and traditions, its influence upon mankind, the ripeness of its civilization, its proud and honorable past, its opportunities for the future, what it had been in the early world, what it might be even, in a world under the sway of the coarser and sterner Celts and Scythians and Gauls and Saxons, he became its enthusiastic friend. He saw a future for China, and one which had never appeared to its patient, taciturn and self-contained rulers. He saw that China, by reason of emigration and our hungry Pacific shores, was more closely allied to that of the United States than to any other nation; and as our Minister, he aimed to unite the two countries in the bonds of common sympathy and appreciation. In this work he had the aid of that great Englishman, Sir FREDERICK BRUCE. We had been fortunate in having had such Ministers as CALEB CUSHING and WILLIAM B. REED, and the work they began he carried to the end. BRUCE and BURLINGAME gave success to the policy that meant justice to China and the world. They did not believe in force and brutality. They could not see how so keen and active a people should be treated as barbarians, when they were, in fact, almost as far advanced in the arts and sciences, the practice of moral law and the principles of universal education, as any nation in Europe. True, they were men of peace, and rather wedded to narrowing forms and customs, and not fitted to cope with the strenuous and exacting nations of the West. This was no reason why they should be robbed and dishonored and remanded to the mercy of sordid tradesmen and adventurers.

So it came to pass that as the Minister of this policy ANSON BURLINGAME so won the affections of these strange people, that when his work was done as the Ambassador of America, China implored him to go over the world and do a still greater work for her. From the United States he received the welcome due to a distinguished son and the Ambassador of a distinguished people. We know how proud and happy he felt at the reception of his Embassy. He came in trepidation and left in triumph, for he loved his work and was happy in its fulfillment. The evening before he sailed for England he sat up far into the morning with one or two of his personal friends, and spoke of the future that he saw before China and the United States with rapturous enthusiasm, and of the mission in Europe with hope, but not without concern. He expected no such welcome as he had received at home until he reached St. Petersburg, and he would be impatient until he reached the Court of the Czar. How little we felt that the consummation of that wish would be to him the end and the beginning of all things.

The death of Mr. BURLINGAME is a calamity that we can only faintly measure. We revert to the man as we knew him,—and before whom there opened such a dazzling future. He was a man to whom all things were possible. His natural genius was great. He was not a student; he hated application and plodding work, and loved the hours of contemplation and ease. In later life his habits came under sterner control. As a Congressman he was known as a brilliant, idle, good-humored, rather superficial, eloquent speaker,—shrinking from hard work, but when driven to it by strong incentive, showing the vastness and fertility of his intellect. His speech in the House upon BRODERICK'S death was a masterpiece of noble and pathetic eloquence. On his return from China he had grown immensely, and only those who knew him intimately saw without surprise the development of powers which made him fit to deal with CLARENDON and GORTCHAKOFF and BISMARCK, and to rank with the statesmen of the world. Few men have been cut down at the beginning of such a promising career. It was his hope to return to California and spend his days upon a beautiful estate he had bought near San Francisco. Had it pleased Almighty God to have spared him to return, there is little doubt that he would have become the representative man of the Pacific coast.

The Slaughter of the Piegans.

When CUSTER, last year, moved against Black Kettle and the Cheyennes, destroying the camp of that thieving band with great slaughter, we defended and applauded the affair, because the offence had been greater even than the penalty. When CARR and his cavalry made his famous raid soon after, killing, capturing and scattering hostile savages, we praised it, because the gang attacked were a plundering, murderous lot, who deserved all the chastisement that could well be inflicted. But the slaughter of the Piegans in Montana is a more serious and a more shocking affair than the sacking of Black Kettle's camp on the Washita. We do not deny that the band which Colonel BAKER annihilated had been guilty of crimes; but the wholesale massacre of men, women and children seems to have been a different affair from the surprise of CUSTER, and really an atrocious one.

Mr. VINCENT COLLYER's letter of the 22d to Mr. BRUNOT is dated from the Board of Indian Commissioners, Department of the Interior, and hence acquires a semi-official and even Governmental sanction; and that letter represents the attack on the Piegan village in Montana to have been simply a sickening slaughter. No other terms will remotely qualify it; no extenuating merit attaches to it. A dense fog, in the dark of Winter, a quiet force of well armed, well mounted troops surrounded and surprised an Indian village, which was at once and perforce within their power. Did this force of our troops call for a surrender? Did they give any quarter? Mr. VINCENT COLLYER tells us that they did not, and that, on the contrary, though the savages numbered far less than our troops, the latter began and continued butchery until one hundred and seventy-three persons were killed.

What that "butchery" was may be known from the fact that, according to General SHERMAN'S report, our only loss was one man killed, and one man "injured in falling from his horse." But of the Indians 173 paid the forfeit of their lives. And this is not all. Mr. COLLYER tells us that of these 173, only fifteen were soldiers, or men between 18 and 37 years old, while at any rate, only twenty-five were between the outside fighting ages of 18 and 60. Besides these, there were eight men killed over 60. Take these altogether, and we have a conceivable resisting strength of just thirty-three.

What of the other 140? Of these ninety were women, more than half over 40 years of age; and the other fifty were children—all killed in "one fell swoop." "Many of the children," says Mr. COLLYER, "were in their parents' arms," and all were under 13 years of age. Can we call the killing of 173 people, of whom 140 were women and children, anything but a sickening slaughter?

We do not desire to wander into mere sentimentality in this matter, but here are the horrible official facts. They are derived from Lieutenant W. B. PRASE, an officer of the Army, and agent of the Blackfeet, of whom, according to our remembrance, the Piegans are a sub-tribe, and they are indorsed or attested by General SULLY, a well-known Indian fighter and negotiator in our army. Are not the facts sufficiently shocking to demand an inquiry by Congress? We admit that, during the past year, the Piegans have committed many outrages, and have rendered themselves liable to be punished; but so long ago as the 23d of December, General PARKER, the Indian Commissioner, declared that "in Montana the danger of a serious outbreak, it is believed, is past." The question is whether a wholesale slaughter of women and children was needed for the vindication of our arms; and whether capture, as in the cases of CUSTER and CARR, would not have accomplished all needful purposes.

Senator CONKLING'S speech on the Fifteenth Amendment was a good sound argument, and his onslaught upon the New-York Democracy was very effective until he treated his audience to some "odorous comparisons." It is not easy to say whom he had in his mind when he spoke ironically of "SEXTUS as a vestal virgin." SEXTUS, the questor, was not very rigid in his political opinions, and SEXTUS, the physician, may have had his foibles. But any SEXTUS with pretensions to the virginal coronet is unrecorded in history. Apart from this illustration, the Democrats will have no difficulty in comprehending Mr. CONKLING'S allusions.

The Mayor of this City has distinctly disavowed all pecuniary share in the profits of the scandalous Fifth-avenue job. The disclaimer was not unnecessary, for charges were being made against him of a very positive kind, and the public had no means of judging how far they were sustained by facts. We now learn that there was no truth whatever in them. The great point will be to prevent any future transactions of the kind. Macadamized roads or Belgian pavements are tolerably safe ventures, and beyond them the science of road making does not seem to have progressed. The costly failure in Fifth-avenue will not soon be forgotten, and the persons who pocketed the proceeds of the swindle—for no other word describes the transaction—have seen the end of their gains from that particular source. The Mayor has interposed to prevent a new experiment, and we do not suppose that he will be "caught napping" again.

REYNOLDS has been condemned to die on the 8th of April. So far justice has been done—but as a contemporary too justly reminds us, REAL was also sentenced to death, and no one has ever believed that the sentence would be carried out. The conviction of REYNOLDS does not prove that we are about to enter upon a new era in the administration of justice, for he possessed none of that political influence which is potent to save criminals from the punishment they have provoked. The Tribune detects some circumstances in the case which confirm it in its opinion that capital punishment ought to be abolished. Yet it can scarcely have overlooked the fact that hanging was the only penalty which the miscreant REYNOLDS really dreaded. This is shown by the anxious inquiries he put to all his visitors as to his chances of saving his neck. He is only "mad nor' nor' west." Tell him that he would get off with imprisonment "up the river," and the mask of stupidity which he habitually wears would at once fall off. Death being the most terrible retribution for crime conceivable, it naturally acts as the most powerful deterrent to crime—and consequently it affords a safeguard which society cannot afford to throw away.

The Democratic papers outside New-York very plainly give us to understand that the present schism in their party is not intended by any one to have the effect of relieving the people from the yokedom of the "Rings." This is candid, if not entirely unexpected. The knights of the road may sometimes have quarreled over their relative proportions of the spoils, but in such cases they never settled the question by returning the booty to the rightful owners. By the time the Legislature meets again some sort of compromise may possibly have been agreed to. Our expectations from the World are considerably lessened by the fact that it will not attack the gravest of all the scandals which exist in New-York—the notorious nullidity of a section of the Judiciary. We must trust to public opinion and the revolt of the Bar to work out the needful reforms.

Mr. FECHTER seems predestined to set the dramatic critics by the ears, while remaining unconscious himself of the fray he has excited. The Boston papers praise him, it is true, with wonderful unanimity. The Express of this City, observing that fact, pats itself encouragingly on the head and says: "As the Express was almost the only New-York journal which upheld Mr. FECHTER'S performance of the melancholy Dane, the ratification of its verdict by the critical Press of Boston is gratifying." There is nothing like modesty. We had thought that a journal known as the TIMES had said a few words in Mr. FECHTER'S favor, then quite recently, and that the Express had quoted them. But, perhaps, the TIMES has latterly been so just, it mouthpiece, and he will very readily concede, that the Express is the only journal which has ever spoken in his favor. It is satisfactory to learn now that the Express did the work, but why does it want to put on all the laurels?

The manner in which Spain appears to be carrying on the war in Cuba is not calculated to enlist in her behalf the sympathies of the American people. Respect for public law has hitherto withheld that "recognition" which a large section of the people wish to see the Cubans receive. It is impossible to say how long Spain could go on in her present courses without greatly endangering this position. "It is well known," writes our Consul at Santiago de Cuba, that the Spanish General "gives imperative orders to make this a war of extermination." He adds that the Cubans are better armed than formerly. The season is not far distant when the Spanish troops will find General Disease and General Climate fighting against them. Will Spain, thus pushed to extremities, still remain obstinate, or rather take the wiser course of inviting the United States Government to act as umpire in the struggle?

Judge INGRAHAM'S charge to the jury on the Reynolds trial was of the character we had a right to anticipate. The prisoner's counsel had done his best to frighten the jury by warning them that his client would probably haunt them after he was dead. But it is the wild beast alive, and not his ghost, that society has to beware of. The jury could only do their duty according to their oath, and that being done, they are in a position to defy the murderer's specter. Judge INGRAHAM very properly put aside all the advocate's talk about bogeys. "No evidence," he charged the jury, "had been introduced to show that the prisoner had ever been insane, or subject to diseases that induce insanity." One or two of the jurymen seemed still to be a little scared, like children after dark when their nurses have been telling them stories about hobgoblins. But they managed to screw their courage to the sticking point, and in the comma trials of the same kind—may we include the case of JACKSON in the list?—it is to be hoped that other juries will act as promptly, and be mindful of the solemn obligations of their oaths.

The fates are against British statesmen. The casualties in the political field have recently been more numerous than if the same number of men had been engaged on a real field of battle. Lord CAIRNS is obliged to retire from work. Mr. BRIGHT is very ill. Mr. DISRAELI is suffering from bronchitis. Sir R. COLLIER, the Attorney-General, went out shooting, and was brought down himself; some keen sportsman shot him in the leg. The Solicitor-General, Sir J. D. COLERIDGE, has been nearly upset by a drunken driver. If matters go on like this all the leading men in England will be hors de combat, and the young ones will have a fair chance. Perhaps the English people would soon be able to reconcile themselves to that dispensation.

It may seem trite enough to point to the savage ferocities which grow out of the use of alcoholic liquor, and show that most of the bloodshed recorded in our columns from day to day is caused by it. But this Hottentot propensity in civilized society should be commented on occasionally. We have recently had the Brooklyn case and other cases of homicide, all closely traceable to the poison which so many of our people are fools enough to sip and swallow, in token of enjoyment and good fellowship; and now there is the story of the two brothers BOOTH, Englishmen, residing with their mother at Fall River—the elder ill-treating his mother, murdering his brother for interfering, and then, in an agony of remorse, taking his own life: all because he thought, like so many others, that whisky is a good and pleasant restorative for a hard-working man. It has been proposed that the young people in our schools should be taught something of the laws of life and health; and we think such a teaching would have a good effect in removing much of the ignorance at present existing on the use of alcoholic beverages.

AMUSEMENTS.

Musical.

ITALIAN OPERA.

Mr. MARETZEK has determined to close his season, or rather to postpone the remaining nights of it, until after Lent. It seems that one of his main attractions having failed him, he doubts the strength of those that remain to carry him through the advertised season. Mr. MARETZEK has worked hard of late to please the public, in many instances with excellent success, and we feel sure that he will have the general sympathy in a disappointment wherein so many must share. The following is his explanatory card:

CARD TO THE PUBLIC.—The manager, when announcing the second season of twenty nights, intended as one of the features of attraction the production of MOZART'S "Flauto Magico," with the coöperation of Mlle. CARLOTTA PATTI as the Queen of the Night. After the commencement of the season the manager received a letter from Mr. MAX STRAKOSCH, informing him that in consequence of Mlle. PATTI'S long illness in Charleston she would have to leave, and would be postponed, and that she would probably be unable to visit New-York before April next. Not being prepared with any other great novelty, and unable, without time for preparation, to give that variety in the repertoire which the public requires, the manager has concluded to postpone the remainder of the season until after Lent. By that time he hopes to be enabled to produce Mlle. CARLOTTA PATTI in opera, or to present such other novelties as will give complete satisfaction. In deciding on this postponement of the remainder of the season, the manager thinks that he will avoid disappointment to the public, and save himself from heavy losses which, at the present moment, he is unable to sustain. Tickets purchased for to-morrow evening's performance will be redeemed at the usual ticket offices. MAX MARETZEK.

Miscellaneous Notes.

Mr. J. E. HANER has the intention of giving, on March 9, at Association Hall, a concert in memory of LOUIS MOREAU GOTTSCHALK. The plan is an excellent one and ought to have the approval, and its execution the coöperation, of artists and public.... We are advised that the intended representation, at the Theatre Francais, of "La Dame Blanche," for the benefit of M. GERRESHEUCK, will positively occur on Friday evening. Recent difficulties at that house make the assurance necessary. Tuesday, in consequence of pecuniary troubles, no entertainment was given there, and the audience was dismissed after an hwaital of events, extending almost over two hours. The French artists who were to sing were not responsible, it must be noticed, for the non-fulfillment of the manager's promise, and it is to be hoped that they, represented Friday by M. GERRESHEUCK, will not be held accountable for the disappointment. Tickets purchased for Tuesday and not returned will admit, we are requested to say, to "La Dame Blanche." Mme. GERRESHEUCK-PERSELL is to sing Anna in BOIELDIEU'S masterpiece.

The World and the Judges.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Perhaps the reason the World declines to publish the names of the "Judges who sell injustice for a price" is because they are already as well known. Were it to answer, it would doubtless say that if there is any one still so ignorant as not to know, he need only consult the publicly-expressed opinion of the tenants, and partisanry of the legal profession, (of which latter, by the way, the TIMES has latterly been so just a mouthpiece,) and he will very readily ascertain.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

ARRIVAL OF THE HAVANA STEAMSHIP REFUGIAN.

The steamship Refugian, which left Havana Feb. 19, reached sale yesterday. Purser OSCAR CROCKERSON has our thanks for the prompt delivery of our Cuban files and correspondence.

The Situation—Affairs at Puerto Principe, Cinco Villas and Bayamo—Work on Retaking—The Murder of Greenwaldth—Movements of Santa Anna.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Tuesday, Feb. 15, 1870.

It is almost an impossibility to announce any change in the military condition, or of the suppression of the rebellion. Every steamer from the Eastern and Central Departments announces, however, a number of skirmishes and encounters. The character of the war has changed, and the concentration of troops and movements in large masses towards the strongholds of the rebellion has turned out to be a grand failure. The only mode of warfare which promises success to the Spaniards is that adopted by their enemies, namely, the division of all their regiments and battalions into small detachments of fifty to two hundred men, such detachments being enabled to enter the woods with less noise and greater ease, and at the same time to cover more exposed territory. The war in Cuba does not bear the slightest resemblance to a war in any other country; it can only be likened to a grand hunt or battue. The enemy must first be discovered, and after that the utmost care must be employed to get him to face the music—a very difficult thing to do as a general rule. Every time the Cubans can manage to get out of the way of the troops without an interchange of leaden courtesies, it is a comparative victory for them, as every forced march leaves the troops weaker and with many of their number sacrificed.

Five hundred colored firemen from this city will depart on Friday for the Cinco Villas. The men are not overpleased at the prospect of leaving their homes and families, and the very pertinent question is asked, why the very ultra patriotic Spanish volunteers, who appear so anxious to measure their strength with the Cubans, are not sent there instead of the blacks, who are nowise desirous of being heroes.

PUERTO PRINCIPE.

From Puerto Principe we learn that PUELLO is there yet and in a sickly condition, and that his late army has somewhat recovered from the effects of the big battle, which they did not win quite as much as the Havana journals would like us to believe. GOYENECHE, whose departure on the 5th from that city was heralded with such a grand flourish of trumpets, and who was expected to come back crowned with laurels, returned to Principe on the 8th after an absence of only three days, having taken part only in one or two insignificant skirmishes with small rebel bodies. The Cubans continue to burn and destroy every house and hut, and all forage, and to destroy every animal in the immediate vicinity of Puerto Principe. Their object, in addition to the natural and inherent tendency of the Spanish race to destroy, appears to be to deprive the Spaniards of the means of subsisting on their horses and cattle. Every load of fodder will in future have to be brought from a longer distance, and to be fought for at the point of the bayonet. This will necessarily compel a large number of troops to remain in the vicinity, who otherwise might be useful against the enemy.

HOLGUIN.

In Holguin the different bands of insurgents appear to have things almost their own way. When the troops march against them, they make themselves scarce, and the moment the troops return to their encampments, the insurgents burn, rob, or fight, as suits them best.

CINCO VILLAS.

The Cinco Villas are apparently tranquil. On the morning of the 3d a party of insurgents was surprised at the Aragu, in the Roguete Mountains; six insurgents were killed, but their leader, a negro named DOROTEO, escaped with the remainder, the party losing all their arms. The Baire Volunteers, all natives of Cuba, have distinguished themselves lately by capturing an insurgent encampment near Baire, where they found several cases containing arms and clothing, the loss of which will be severely felt by the insurgents. The Havana journals publish a number of documents captured among the luggage of the Marquis of SANTA LUCIA, the President of the Cuban House of Representatives, wherever that body may be located. The letters give a very disheartening account of the condition of the revolutionists, but are not of sufficient importance to Americans to merit a translation.

BLOCKADE RUNNING.

On the morning of Feb. 3 a schooner was discovered on the rocks, about three miles from Gibarra. It proved to be the schooner Herald, of Nassau, laden with arms for the insurgents. The sea ran so high that the men-of-war boats could not go near the vessel, and the Gibarra volunteers went to the wreck by land. Many cases of ammunition and arms were discovered, and have since been brought to Gibarra. The crew of the vessel and the passengers, if she brought any, which is very probable, made their way to the interior. In connection with the story of this vessel, it is stated that General QUESADA, the former leader of the Cubans, attempted to escape from the island with $40,000, and several followers, in a boat, and that the boat was discovered by a Spanish cruiser and pursued. QUESADA consequently had to turn back, and finally to jump into the water and swim or wade ashore. This story is fishy, and is undoubtedly an invention, especially as the origin, the Havana Diario, is very poor authority, where the telling of the truth is concerned.

THE GREENWALDTH MURDER.

Several accomplices of the murderer of GREENWALDTH, and also some other criminals, have been arrested and are lodged in the Cabana fort. RODAS is determined to do justice, but has a very hard time trying to. No witnesses can be found to testify against the assassin ZAMORA, threats and means of persuasion having been employed to prevent the witnesses from appearing. Prominent among these opponents of justice was an old associate of ZAMORA, who was discovered at his tricks and arrested last night. But if common rogues go to work thus, what excuse is there for a man like RAMON HERRERA, the owner of several steamers, and Colonel of the Fifth Volunteer Battalion, who went to the house where the wounded Americans lie, and offered them money if they testified that they could not identify the assassin? Colonel HERRERA desires to screen a member of his battalion from a certain death, and although that member is a cowardly assassin, this may be alleged as a partial excuse. RODAS heard of the attempt, sent for Colonel HERRERA, and upbraided him severely. The wounded men are progressing finely, and if RODAS and his efforts are crowned with the success they merit, and his aims are carried out, not one but half a dozen assassins will be shot within a few days.

MOVEMENTS OF SANTA ANNA.

On Sunday morning, General SANTA ANNA, the old agitator, of whom nothing had been heard for some time, arrived from Puerto Plata in the Spanish mail steamer. For such a keen man as he is reported to be, he committed several very stupid blunders, the principal one being his leaving back to Cuba, whence he had been banished by LERSUNDI, the decree still remaining in force, and the Spanish Government very anxious to maintain amicable relations with the Mexican Government. Then he came without a passport, and finally he disembarked clandestinely without having obtained permission from the Government. The Captain-General, hearing of his arrival, sent the Civil Governor to him with the order for him to embark and leave the island immediately, as RODAS would not permit any violation of international law or the organization of any filibustering expedition against Mexico or any other country. SANTA ANNA bored the Governor a great deal with stories of what he had been, and he said that his intention was to proceed straightway to Mexico on the English steamer of the 22d, when he would make a rapid and triumphal entry into the capital, the Mexican people en masse awaiting for his arrival. On Monday morning (16th) he called on the Captain-General in person, repeating his story, alleging also ill health as a reason for not taking the first steamer to the United States, and asking for permission to remain, but RODAS was inflexible, and peremptorily refused it. SANTA ANNA now requests to be allowed to go to Matanzas, but it is doubtful whether RODAS will allow him to remain here long enough to catch the steamer which leaves for that island on the 26th inst. The personal appearance of SANTA ANNA has not changed since I saw him eighteen months ago, but his spirits are more broken, and his manner inspires a certain feeling of compassion in the beholder. It is certain, however, that he will not go to Vera Cruz from Havana.

QUASIMODO.

OBITUARY.

Hon. Anson Burlingame.

The tidings of the death of Hon. ANSON BURLINGAME at St. Petersburg, yesterday, where he had just arrived with his associates of the Chinese Embassy, were received in the City with universal surprise and regret. The particulars of the unexpected event thus far received are meagre. It is only known that he died of congestion of the lungs after a very short illness.

Although a native of this State, Mr. BURLINGAME's life from early youth was spent out of it, and his career is associated almost entirely with the political history of other States. From New-Berlin, Chenango County, where he was born, Nov. 14, 1820, he went to the West. His boyhood was spent in Michigan, and his youth pretty much in roving about the wild country of the extreme West. He participated as a boy in various expeditions, some of them with the object of surveying new territories, and others to negotiate new treaties with the Indians, far beyond the confines of civilization. His only education was received in the Academy at Detroit and the Branch University of Michigan; but, returning after a while to the East, he completed his studies at Harvard University, where he graduated in 1846, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He immediately opened a law office in Boston with a friend, under the firm name of BRIGGS & BURLINGAME.

From this period may be said to date his political life, for he at once entered into the local politics of the city with an energy that drew to his office much of that description of practice that attaches itself to lawyers who gain a certain city notoriety. He was a vigorous and popular local politician, drawing around him the most zealous voters of his section. He was one of the best and most sought after "stump-speakers," and for a time was the leader and the idol of the "North Enders," once the hardiest and most boisterous campaigners of Boston. In the campaign of 1848 he took an active part in the Free Soil movement, and afterwards identified himself with the Republican Party, in which he ranked with the leaders. In 1852 he was elected to the State Senate, and the next year a member of the Convention for revising the Constitution of Massachusetts.

This same year, 1853, he was sent to Congress to represent Boston and Cambridge in the House. Here he remained for six years. He at once took a prominent part in the proceedings, and was among the best known of his associates in Congress. His most celebrated speech was his scathing denunciation of the infamous assault upon Senator SUMNER by PRESTON S. BROOKS. This drew out a challenge from Mr. BROOKS to fight a duel, or "any other Yankee mudsill." He accepted, named rifles as the weapons, and the Canada side of Niagara Falls. But the combat never took place, Mr. BROOKS failing to respond, announcing as an excuse that to reach the ground he would have to go through a "hostile country." During the greater portion of his service in Congress he was a prominent member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. His efforts towards the end of his service were to keep the party united, so that it might conquer in the Presidential election, and he then won the title of a "pacifier."

Mr. LINCOLN, shortly after his accession to the Presidency, at first appointed Mr. BURLINGAME Minister to Austria, but subsequently to China. The reason for the substitution of China for Austria was the receipt of notification, by Mr. BURLINGAME, on the way to his post at Vienna, that the Austrian Government would not receive him as he had taken too prominent a part in raising Sardinia from a second to a first-class mission. The Government pocketed the indignity, being just then entering upon the great work of suppressing treason at home. His diplomacy at the Court of China is well known. He laid the foundation of the "co-operative policy," which guarantees the autonomy of China, and led the opposition to the "concession doctrine," which, if persisted in, would have resulted in the disruption of the Empire. That the Chinese Prime Minister appreciated his services is evident from this unexampled honor bestowed upon him. Mr. BURLINGAME was on the point of returning to the United States when the mission was unexpectedly tendered him by Prince KUNG, and accepted by him after consultation with his colleagues. It is related that "Prince KUNG came in solemn state to the United States Legation, and presented the Imperial decree, which bears date Nov. 25, 1867, and is written on heavy yellow parchment, wrapped in yellow brocade satin, the Imperial color, and encased in a yellow box. He has given him the title of Embassador, and clothed him with the most ample powers." He however preferred the title of Envoy, and was accordingly commissioned Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, or in Chinese, Foo-an-chew, (BURLINGAME, ANSON,) Chin-chi-choong-jen-tachen, (Minister of Heavy Responsibilities.)

Mr. BURLINGAME started on his tour among the great nations almost immediately after the receipt of his papers. The Mission arrived in the United States about the 1st of June, and during its stay was entertained with generous hospitality. The treaty was signed in Washington on the 4th of July, was transmitted to the Senate on the 11th, and ratified on the 16th. From here the Embassy proceeded to Great Britain. There the treaty was at first almost universally condemned; but Mr. BURLINGAME succeeded in radically changing the popular opinion and in negotiating satisfactorily. He afterwards negotiated treaties with France and other of the European Powers, and had but recently presented himself at the Court of Russia, where he was received with extreme cordiality, and with every disposition on the part of the Czar to promote the objects of his mission. His sudden death will cause universal regret, for he was engaged in a great and important work of which much was expected.

Mr. BURLINGAME was a thorough American. His ancestors early came to this country, and originally settled in Rhode Island, and thence emigrated to the interior of New-York. The BURLINGAMES figured in the French wars on the American Continent about the middle of the eighteenth century, and subsequently in the American Revolution of 1776. They were conspicuous for their patriotism and devotion to the cause of independence, participating in the service of the American Navy and sharing in many of its gallant exploits. Mr. BURLINGAME's father was born in New-Berlin, and his mother, now deceased, in Providence, R. I. His mother was a Miss ANGEL, a descendant of Colonel ISRAEL ANGEL, the famous fighter of General GREENE's Revolutionary army. Mr. BURLINGAME married when a young man a daughter of Hon. ISAAC LIVERMORE, of Cambridge, Mass., who survives him, with a small family.

Latest English Papers.

The steamer just arrived brings another excellent number of the Graphic, with a charming picture of two children reading their "first valentine," another of "St. Valentine's Day," and a third representing "Kabyle Orange Sellers in Algiers." Each one is a beautiful specimen of wood engraving. There are also several excellent portraits. Mr. BENEDICT has received, in addition, the Academy, No. 5, the Period, Nature, the Illustrated London News, and other popular publications.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.

Messrs. POMEROY and ANTHONY presented petitions for extending the suffrage to women.

ALASKA.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on Territories, reported with amendments the bill for a territorial form of government for Alaska.

ABOLITION OF THE GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS.

Mr. SUMNER offered resolutions instructing the Naval and Military Committees to inquire into and report upon the expediency of abolishing the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and the Military Academy at West Point, and the substitution, by assignments to duty in various colleges throughout the Union, of naval and military officers as instructors in navigation, naval warfare and military tactics, or the inauguration of some other system calculated to relieve the Government of a large expense, and enable all who desire it to secure an education for the army or navy at their own expense. The resolution was agreed to.

THE WHITE PISTOL PATENT.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, the message of the President vetoing the bill for the relief of ROULIN WHITE, relative to the extension of a pistol patent, was taken up, and Mr. FERRY made an argument against the bill, and in support of the President's objections. After further discussion, the bill was laid aside.

THE MISSISSIPPI SENATORS ELECT.

Mr. WILSON presented the credentials of H. R. REVELS (the colored Senator elect) as Senator elect from Mississippi, which were read. The paper was a certificate of election for the term ending in 1871, and was signed by General AMES, Military Governor of Mississippi.

Mr. SAULSBURY inquired if the paper was any evidence of the election of the person referred to.

The Chair said if any objection was made to the administration of the oath to Mr. REVELS, the question whether the oath should be administered would be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY said that before the question of administering the oath came up, other questions might have to be settled. At this particular stage he submitted that the certificate of a military officer that this man had been elected to the Senate of the United States was not such a certificate as was required by law.

Mr. STEWART remarked that the certificates of election of various Senators from the reconstructed States had been signed by the Provisional Governors.

Mr. SAULSBURY proceeded to argue that admission to the Senate could only be claimed upon a valid election by a valid Legislature. In the present case there was no evidence emanating from the Legislature that they had elected any one, but simply a certificate from an individual styling himself a military officer and Provisional Governor. He denied that any Provisional Governor could send a communication to this body, for such an officer was unknown to the Constitution.

Mr. WILSON forwarded to the Clerk and had read a certified copy of the proceeding in the election of Senators of the United States by the Mississippi Legislature.

Mr. DRAKE remarked that the objection was without force, as the act of Congress required the Governor to certify to the election of a Senator, but did not say the evidence should come from the Legislature. The communication before the Senate from the Governor of Mississippi, provisional though he might be called, furnished the very evidence required by the Constitution. The greatest evil of the State in the present was sufficient for the Senate, for the right of a Governor to use that seal could not now be inquired into, but in the present case must be accepted as a fact.

Mr. SAULSBURY referred to the newspaper announcement of the election of a person named ALCORN as Governor of Mississippi. Thereupon, taking the ground of the Senator (Mr. DRAKE,) this paper did not show the signature of the real Governor.

Mr. DRAKE replied, in the absence of official information, that the newly-elected Governor had not been installed. The Senator (Mr. SAULSBURY) could not insist that the office of Governor had changed hands.

Mr. TRUMBULL said, under the law the Governor was required to give a certificate of election. Strictly speaking, the present certificate was defective in not reciting the facts of the election in detail; but instances had occurred in the Senate in which members had been sworn in upon certificates of election. The case of the election of Senator DAVIS was an instance of this. He then called for the reading of the papers submitted by Mr. WILSON.

The papers referred to, detailing the meeting of the Joint Convention of the Legislature, at which, out of 119 votes, REVELS received 81, were read.

Mr. WILSON said the papers included a certificate of the Clerk of the Lower House to the correctness of the journals, a similar report of the proceedings of the Senate, and a certificate signed by the Secretary of State and Provisional Governor.

Mr. DAVIS considered all the papers informal, and insufficient as testimony of the election. He admitted that members were often admitted to seats without the production of any return, and this was true of his own qualification; but this was only because the party was not challenged. The practice was uniform that when challenged the proper evidence should be produced, and legal testimony of his election, and unless it was produced could not take his seat. He claimed that in the sense made use of by the act of Congress and Constitution, no man could be Governor of a State who had not received a majority of the votes of the people of the State for that position. Therefore, in assuming to act as Governor, General AMES was guilty of an unwarranted usurpation of power.

Mr. STOCKTON said by reference to the Army Register, he had discovered that General ADELBERT AMES there designated as Brevet Brigadier-General and Military Commander of the Fourth Military District; and he was gentleman whose name was appended to this paper, which purported to be a credential of a Senator of the United States. He would call attention to the fact that the credentials of a Senator from Mississippi depended entirely for verification upon the signature of a commandant of a military district, and he would ask Senators if the credentials did not purport to come from a State which, in the meaning of the law, had a republican form of government. Another objection to the gentlemen who claimed to represent Mississippi, was that they had been elected before the State was admitted in Congress.

Mr. WILSON hoped there would be no further objection to administering the oath of office to Mr. REVELS, believing this to be exactly similar to all other cases of Senators from the Southern States.

The Senate then decided, without division, to receive the paper presented by Mr. WILSON.

Mr. SUMNER offered a resolution to refer to the Judiciary Committee the credentials of Messrs. AMES and REVELS, claiming seats as Senators elect from the State of Mississippi, and instructing them to inquire and report whether either or both of said parties had been citizens of the United States for nine years, and whether said AMES was not several months prior, and at the time of his election, a commissioned officer of the United States, and Military Commander in Mississippi under the Reconstruction acts of Congress, and whether he has since resigned.

Mr. POMEROY said the credentials of General AMES had not been presented, and therefore could not be referred.

Mr. STOCKTON modified his resolution so as to omit the reference to General AMES, but proceeded to discuss the questions presented by the cases of both gentlemen. He said that the gentleman who had signed the certificate of election for Mr. REVELS claimed to have been also elected by the Mississippi Legislature for the other unexpired term. The Commencement and conclusion of a person holding office under the United States from being a member of either House of Congress during his continuance in office. Yet this gentleman (General AMES) was a Brevet Brigadier-General at the time of the election, and his commission was dependent upon for the validity of the credentials of his colleague. The question of the citizenship of Mr. REVELS also deserved attention, and he insisted upon the inquiry in good faith. He cited from various authorities, and argued to show that a person could not acquire a domicile by mere residence in any territory, or any place.

Mr. TRUMBULL said the discussion of the claim of General AMES to a seat was premature; that the Senator from New-Jersey (Mr. STOCKTON) had not asserted his belief nor his reason to believe that Mr. REVELS was not an inhabitant of the State of Mississippi. Consequently there was no excuse for referring the matter to a committee. There was nothing to show that REVELS was not an inhabitant of the State from which he came. The evidence of his election to the Senate was the very best he (Mr. REVELS) could present. The objection that he was elected before Mississippi was entitled to representation had no weight, because the organization of the Legislature, and the election of United States Senators were legalized in the admission of the State. The Senator from Delaware (Mr. SAULSBURY) asked for a certificate of the Governor; but here were the certificates. The officers of the Legislature, who were actually the officers of the Senatorial election, and the Provisional Governor, whose military position did not lessen his standing as Governor, also certified to the election.

Mr. DAVIS gave notice of his intention to resist to the last the admission of these two men, and in the conscientious discharge of his duty he would interpose an objection at every stage of the proceeding. He believed the Radical Party had gone mad; but there was a method in their madness. Never before in the history of the country had a colored man been elected to the Senate, but the sword of a dictator had opened the way for him. But for that sword he never would have been presented here. This man never was and never would be the choice of the people of Mississippi. That fact could not be denied. Moreover, REVELS was not a citizen, as shown by the Dred Scott case. In view of these facts, he asked, would the Senate refuse to refer the credentials of a Republican, after having three times during the past nine years referred to the Judiciary Committee the credentials of Democratic Senators, namely, those of Bright, of Oregon; PATTERSON, of Tennessee, and THOMAS, of Maryland. The reason for referring them was, that the Senate was the judge of the qualifications of its own members. He held that Congress could not, by the process proposed, confer citizenship upon a colored man.

Mr. SUMNER, obtaining leave to make a statement, said he would inform Senator DAVIS that twenty years ago, the Supreme Court of Ohio, then composed entirely of Democrats, decided Mr. REVELS to be a citizen, the Court holding that the words "a white citizen" meant one never white then black. Mr. REVELS was included in this decision, and voted in Ohio. Having once enjoyed citizenship, it could not now be denied him.

Mr. DAVIS continued his exposition of the qualifications of citizenship. He remarked that the dominant party would wake up some fine morning and discover that their lease of power was not perpetual; their fantastic tricks would be played to make them cast off as the lion shakes the dewdrops from his mane.

Mr. NYE, in reply to Mr. DAVIS, expressed his surprise to hear the Dred Scott decision cited as an authority for the Senate. He looked upon that decision as an outrage upon the Constitution and upon the rights of the people, and it had been rebuked by the grandest uprising of the people of any age. What an impressive spectacle of retributive justice was witnessed here to-day. In 1861 that proud and haughty man, JEFFERSON DAVIS, left this Chamber to undertake the establishment of a Government founded upon the enslavement of a race whose skin differed in color his own; to-day he, a member of that humble and long-suffering race came here to take the seat which JEFFERSON DAVIS left, and which has remained vacant ever since he left. In reply to what the Senator (Mr. DAVIS) had said about a party coming in power and undoing what had been done, he would tell that Senator that neither he nor any one now living would see the day when any political party would dare undoing of the great measures of justice and humanity enacted by the Republicans in Congress. Their measures would not be overturned so long as republican institutions remained. But the real question at issue here was that of color. The real objection to REVELS was that he was not a white man. But was the Senator (Mr. DAVIS) afraid to enter the race with a colored man for fear of being relegated? He (Mr. NYE) believed that color never did and never would make a man. He rejoiced that the long-looked for day when the theory of the common brotherhood of man—a theory as old as man himself—was to take form and substance. He implored his friend (Mr. DAVIS) to cease feeding upon husks, and to come up to his republican father's house, where there was bread enough to spare. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS replied that the Senator, (Mr. NYE,) and every other Senator, had fully as much prejudice against the negro as he himself, if he had any at all. When the honorable Senator, (Mr. NYE,) or any of his associates on the Republican side, offered to practice what they preached, then he (Mr. DAVIS) might be treated as amenable to the charge of prejudice against color, because he never would consent to do any of these things.

At 5 o'clock Mr. SAULSBURY obtained the floor, but yielded to a motion to adjourn. The Senate accordingly adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE DEATH OF MR. BURLINGAME.

Immediately after the reading of the journal, Mr. BANKS sent to the Clerk's desk and had read the following letter from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.

My Dear General:

A telegram this morning at 8:25, received from Mr. CURTIN at St. Petersburg, announces the death of Mr. BURLINGAME this morning.

In haste, yours,
HAMILTON FISH.

To Hon. N. P. BANKS.

Mr. BANKS addressed the House on the subject. He said: Mr. SPEAKER—Although Mr. BURLINGAME had rendered great services to the country he was not officially connected with this Government at the time of his death. It is not proper, therefore, to interrupt the proceedings of the House at this time by anything more than a statement of this sad event. I trust I may crave the generous indulgence of the House to say that a fitting and proper opportunity will be presented in the regular course of business to express our appreciation of his character and great services. He wished to be remembered in connection with those services, and I promised him, at the last interview I had with him, that his name should not be forgotten. The mediation between the great and ancient empire of the East and the civilized nations of the West is one of the grandest services which any man in modern times has performed. That service Mr. BURLINGAME had carried nearly to its complete success. The Empire of Russia, in which he died, and where he could but just have arrived, was the last of the great States which it was his duty to visit, and there he was certain of soon accomplishing all that could have been expected and desired by him in regard to his great mission. In regard to that mission I will only say that its creation was as much due to the peculiar and high character of Mr. BURLINGAME as to the necessities of the Government which he represented.

ADMISSION OF MISSISSIPPI REPRESENTATIVES.

Messrs. GEORGE E. HARRIS, J. L. MORPHIS, GEORGE C. W. MCKEE and LEONARD W. PIERCE, members elect from Mississippi, appeared, and took the oaths of office.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON introduced a bill granting lands to California to aid in the construction of a railroad from Vallejo to Humboldt Bay, Cal. Referred.

Mr. STROUSE offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Commerce to inquire into the expediency of improving the Connecticut River as recommended in the report of Colonel HOUSTON. Adopted.

Mr. CONGER introduced a joint resolution for the creation of a harbor of refuge on Lake Huron, Mich. Referred.

Mr. BENNETT asked leave to introduce and have put upon its passage a bill for the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River. Mr. WOOD objected.

PUNISHMENT OF POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

The House proceeded to the consideration in the morning hour of the bill to prevent and punish polygamy in Utah, and Mr. FITCH addressed the House in opposition to it. He admitted the probability of the destruction of polygamy by the enactment of the bill, but that that would be a laudable and wise purpose. If such destruction were all that were involved in the matter, it would be his duty to advocate the measure, instead of opposing it; but knowing something of the Mormon country, and something more of the peculiar character and motives of the people inhabiting that country, he was impelled to submit that this bill, if enforced as a law, would provoke consequences most prolific of misfortune and entail results altogether unprecedented, although in the results might be included, first, the temporary obstruction, if not the complete destruction of the great overland railroad; next, Utah would be returned to the desolateness which had once reigned supreme upon her soil. Again the growing industries of a vast country would be checked and the development of the Pacific coast seriously retarded. He feared that the people of Utah would regard the passage of this bill as a declaration of war, and would prepare with all the fury and earnestness and zeal of fanatics, to enter upon a contest most bitter, protracted and bloody. The result of such a contest no man could doubt. The Mormons would be exterminated or driven out of Utah. Within six months polygamy would be destroyed, adultery thus delocalized, concubinage would be stamped out, with virtue and desolation reigning supreme in a waste where only the shout of the savage disturbed the stillness, the rebuking verdict of a tax-burdened people would be that the result accomplished was not worth the sacrifice involved. He condemned the inquiry of the Mormon creed. He was filled with amazement and pity at the voluntary degradation of the Mormon women. He compassionated while he abhorred that spirit, whether it were a spirit of sensuality or of sacrifice, that ignored and repudiated that biblical inequities of nature, that the sacred passion which no man could feel at once for two women, and which no woman could entertain for him whom she did not believe to be exclusively her own. But the question was a practical, not a sentimental one. History nowhere made men more industrious, more powerful or more self-sustaining. They believed in their faith as deeply as the Mahometan believes in his Koran, or the Christian in the crucifixion of his Redeemer. To assail that faith with armies would be to consolidate and strengthen and infuse its votaries with more ardent zeal. There is no doubt that if the provisions of the bill were attempted to be enforced there would be war. On its passage they would hasten to fortify, and provision and arm themselves. They would maintain a contest for months, perhaps for years, with their facilities for organization. They could destroy hundreds of miles of the great overland railroad in a week. Of course, they would be conquered at the end, because they could be exterminated; but it would cost millions upon millions of treasure and thousands upon thousands of lives, and it would cost the interruption of that travel which was permanently growing in importance, and which promised, if undisturbed, to fulfill the dream of COLUMBUS, and to make America a new highway to the Indies. Mr. FITCH concluded by depicting the misfortunes which would be inflicted, even on the women of Utah, by depriving them of even the semblance of marriage which now protects them, and concluded with a strong protest against the passage of the bill. He was listened to throughout with unmarked attention, and his speech was loudly applauded.

Mr. SHERMAN followed in opposition to the bill, which, if enforced, would be most deleterious to the people of California, as the first movement of the Mormons would be to tear up hundreds of miles of the Pacific Railroad. He indorsed generally the views expressed by Mr. FITCH.

The morning hour expired, and the bill went over to the next morning hour.

THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Legislative Appropriation bill, and continued in session till 3 o'clock.

THE CASE OF MR. WHITTEMORE.

At this hour the question of the expulsion of B. F. WHITTEMORE came up for action, the House being unusually full, and the galleries and corridors crowded with spectators. In the absence DAVID SWOOPE, arising direct from Wisconsin, the seat of Mr. HOPKINS, declared vacant by the decision of office.

Mr. LOGAN said that if the House would be satisfied they would find members of Congress going to work and delivering speeches in the House in aid of the press project. [Laughter.] The gentlemen from Massachusetts had spoken about the newspapers howling about the lamp. If members of the House were willing to call the newspaper like sheep in the shambles, he did not think the newspapers for howling about it; and if the House expected its committees to do their duty in investigating frauds, the House itself would have to do its duty in punishing these frauds. If they respected otherwise, the House would be saying to its Committees: "We instructed you to do this, but we did not expect you would do it. We told you to investigate this thing, and to report if you found men guilty, but we did not expect you would do it." If the House did not perform its duties in this matter it would have to send its resolution of inquiry to some other Committee than the Committee on Military Affairs. He moved the previous question on Mr. POLAND's resolution.

The previous question was seconded—yeas 110, nays 29.

The question was first taken on Mr. WARD's amendment to Mr. POLAND's resolution, and it was rejected without a division.

The yeas and nays were then taken on Mr. POLAND's resolution of postponement, and it was rejected, yeas 65, nays 102.

Mr. LOGAN moved the previous question on the adoption of the resolution reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The previous question was seconded.

Mr. MAYNARD moved that the House adjourn. The House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SCHENCK asked Mr. LOGAN to yield that he might offer a resolution.

Mr. LOGAN declined to yield for that purpose, but said he would yield to Mr. WHITTEMORE to make any defense he chose.

Mr. WHITTEMORE rose and appealed to the leniency of the House to extend the time of action until to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN said he did not wish to be considered as press the matter beyond the desire of the House, and as the gentleman from South Carolina naked time until to-morrow, he certainly would make no objections.

Mr. SCHENCK said that as he was not allowed to offer his resolution, he would ask the Associated Press to take notice of it. The resolution which Mr. SCHENCK desired to offer is as follows:

Resolved, That the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on this case be postponed until Wednesday, the 2d of March, and that in the meantime Mr. WHITTEMORE, the member from South Carolina, be permitted to have summoned before the said Committee any of the witnesses named by him in the affidavit which he has submitted to the House to establish the facts in his case, give any explanation which he may think will tend to palliate the offence which he admits that he has committed.

Mr. DAWES made an ineffectual effort to have an evening session on the Legislative Appropriation bill, and then, at 5 o'clock, the House adjourned.

THE REVOLUTION OF '48.

Banquet of French Residents Last Evening—Address to the Republicans in France from Their Brethren in America.

The French Republicans resident in this City and the vicinity, to the number of six or seven hundred, met last night to celebrate, by a banquet at the Union Assembly Rooms, the anniversary of the French Revolution of 1848. M. CHARLES VILLA presided, supported on the right by General CLUSERET, the well known socialist, and on the left by M. C. PELLETIER, representative of Lyons in 1848. ORSINI, brother of the world's assassin of the Emperor NAPOLEON, and J. L. LABIAUX, head of the French delegation from Newark, also had seats on the platform. When the menu had been disposed of M. CHARLES VILLA addressed the assembly on the great day which they were commemorating. He said that on the 24th of February last, the French nation had risen in their might, and had driven out the imbecile LOUIS PHILLIPE. Unfortunately they had established a greater tyrant in the person of NAPOLEON, who had perjured himself, violated the rights of the representatives of the people, and deluged the streets of Paris with innocent blood. Since that date the French people have been kept down by the bayonet and the Chassepot. But this must cease. Liberty is and will be omnipotent. The blood of the martyr VICTOR NOIR, and the dauntless labors of ROCHEFORT, will yet be crowned with success, and their noblest aspirations will be satisfied by the institution of a Republic in France on the model of the great Republic of the Western World, whose privileges and liberties his hearers were now enjoying.

Mr. J. L. LABIAUX next read an address from the French Republicans of America to their brethren in France, which commenced by saying that the exiles who had taken refuge in this country had at times given way to despondency, and doubted of the energy and constancy of the lovers of liberty and progress in France, but these doubts had been dispelled at the appearance of the Lanterne and they now placed unbounded confidence in the men who were led and guided by the noble ROCHEFORT. True, on this side of the ocean they had expected the outbreak of the revolution when NOIR was assassinated, when he was buried by the people, and when the courageous ROCHEFORT was arrested. They were disappointed, but those in the front understood the position of affairs best. Their American brethren would therefore exhort them to be patient and watchful and prudent, so as not to commit themselves, as those in power would wish. They were the advance guard of the grand republican army which was destined to sweep personal government from France and inaugurate a universal Republic. The time for this long wished-for consummation would surely come, if not sooner, at least, when the great criminal was dead who now dishonored France and humanity. Then they will all seize whatever arms come nearest to hand and distinguish themselves in the eyes of the world.

M. GOUR, a young lawyer from France, spoke in the same strain, and was followed by General CLUSERET, M. FERRET, of the France-Amerique and other speakers. The enthusiasm prevailed, and all allusions to ROCHEFORT and liberty were vociferously applauded.

The Ladies' Sorosis Club of New-York recently changed their discussions from woman's suffrage to Hair Preparations and Pimple Banishers. They declared that where nature had not endowed them with beauty, it was their right—yes, their duty—to seek it where they could. So they all voted that MAGNOLIA BALM overcame fallowness, Rough Skin and Bingmarks, and gave to the complexion a most distinguished (Sorosian) and marbleline appearance (dangerous to men, no doubt!) and that LYON'S KATHAIRON made the Hair grow thick, soft and awful pretty, and moreover prevented it from turning gray. If the proprietors of these articles did not send the sisters an invoice, they are not smart.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

Report on the State of the Public Health—Another Process Against the Concrete Swindle.

The Board of Health met yesterday at the usual hour, President GEORGE B. LINCOLN in the chair. The usual routine business from the attorney's office was presented and passed upon, but furnished nothing of general interest. A communication was received from EDWARD M. SHEPARD, Esq., Mayor of Rochester, New-York, stating that apprehensions exist in that city regarding relapsing fever, and asking for information concerning the disease and its treatment. The Corresponding Secretary was directed to send a reply, subject to the approval of the Sanitary Committee.

A petition was presented from ninety-four citizens residing in East One Hundred and Twenty-ninth-street, asking for the removal of the Fisk concrete pavement laid in that street, because it is a public nuisance. The same reasons are given as those that were urged against and caused the extirpation of the same pavement in Fifth-avenue. It is, when dry, cut up by wheels of vehicles, forming an impalpable powder, which is raised by the wind, to the great annoyance of residents and injury of the respiratory organs of all who inhale it. In wet weather the pavement is a slippery paste, exhaling noxious vapors that are detrimental to health, and the third reason assigned is that the furniture of the houses is ruined by the pavements being tracked in when wet, and blown in when dry. The Board ordered the original petition to be filed, and that a copy be transmitted to the Common Council.

A long discussion occurred on the subject of the completion of the appendix to the annual report, which was concluded by directing the Committee having it in charge to publish it as soon as possible, and to supervise all matter that goes into it. The occupancy of cellars provoked another volume of talk, but it was ended without the establishment of any general rule for the guidance of the Sanitary Superintendent during the exigency presented by the prevalence of relapsing fever.

The report of Sanitary Superintendent HARRIS on the state of the public health was read and ordered to be filed. The following presents its material portions:

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF HEALTH,
OFFICE OF SANITARY SUPERINTENDENT,
Tuesday, Feb. 22, 1870.

In the week that ended on Saturday, the 19th inst., there were 517 deaths in New-York, and 156 in Brooklyn; and in the four weeks ending on that date there were 2,204 deaths in the former and 626 in the latter City. These records for the past four weeks show that the death rate in New-York (with a population estimated at 1,000,000) is equal to 26.16 deaths to every 1,000 inhabitants yearly; and that in Brooklyn (with an estimated population of 420,000) the death rate is 30.24 in 1,000. The open Winter has not sensibly affected the rate of mortality, though the weather has favored the activity of some causes of disease. But during the last few weeks a scarlatina has developed itself in a case which has greatly increased in fatality. It was charged with 147 deaths in New-York, to twenty-six in Brooklyn; in these four weeks. This element and fatal necropsy and contagion in our cities, and the diffusion in families, should be restrained by all the means which domestic sanitary care can supply, the chief of which are cleanliness and ventilation of apartments and clothing, and the immediate disinfection of clothing and excreta of the sick. This disease is now so prevalent and fatal in London and other cities in England as to have called forth a memorandum of official sanitary instructions to the people. Its prevalence and mortality of smallpox is so steadily and greatly diminished that it will soon fall below its usual average rate in non-epidemic years. The extent and thoroughness of vaccination and revaccination performed will now insure a longer and more complete respite from unusual prevalence of this disease than has hitherto been enjoyed in many years. Smallpox caused only thirteen deaths in New-York last week, and only two were in hospital. The enlightened action of the Commissioners of Public Charities, in providing ample care in the hospital, and the general cooperation of sanitary authorities, have greatly aided the Health efforts to arrest the progress of this malady. Smallpox is now, and has been for months, nearly twice prevalent in Paris as it is at present in New-York. The combined outbreaks of typhus and typhoid fever have not extended beyond the tenements in which first found. The relapsing fever is fatal in but few cases, yet in a few families and lodgings it has developed a measured a malignant and incurable character. It has given fewer new cases the past week than in the three previous weeks. Thus far it has proved to be so strictly confined to single tenements of badly fed and overcrowded, and dirty, and has spread from one room to another so plainly by the bodies and clothing of the sick, that there can be no kind of doubt concerning the sanitary measures which are necessary to arrest and destroy the new element of the paper relapsing. The sixty-four tenements and lodging cellars in which this fever has successively been found, since the beginning of January, have been so effectually purified that not one of them seems to have ceased to be nests of disease. Hitherto the homeless and wretched guests in the lowest class of common lodging houses have been the chief carriers of this fever from place to place, and it is now certain that most of this pernicious spreading of the disease has occurred at the period of relapse, after the patients had left the hospital or been refused lodgings in the quarters where the first period of the sickness had been suffered. This evil will henceforth be prevented by means of the ample hospital and refuge accommodations which the Commissioners of Public Charities have prepared for the exclusive care of relapsing fever, distinct from all other kinds of disease and charitable care. In London, four months' delay in preparing such hospitals is now costing heavily in the care of the pauperized invalids. It will be a great increase of the burden of the poor, if a single parish has now found it necessary to establish a hospital at a cost of $26,000. The timely action by which this kind of pauperism and sanitary care has been provided for the sick poor in New-York helps to protect all the cities in the United States. The rates of mortality in New-York and Brooklyn and all the large cities of the United States are lower at present than the rates in the chief cities of Europe. London and nineteen other cities of British origin record an average death rate of 31 in 1,000 inhabitants (yearly) the first week in February. In Glasgow the rate was 30 per 1,000; in Paris, the previous week, 31 per 1,000; in Berlin, 31 per 1,000; in Vienna, 39 per 1,000. Poverty and insufficient food have much to do with the increased death rate in all great cities in Winter.

Sensational Stories Concerning the Public Health.

At a recent meeting the Board of Health prohibited the publication of any official or semi-official document, or any paper purporting to be official, by any of its officers, without the consent of the Board, or of the Sanitary Committee. This action was rendered necessary by the complaints of citizens that sensational newspaper articles are frequently published, purporting to emanate from the Board, and which are liable to do great harm. In the case of relapsing fever, many articles have been published of a character tending to excite unnecessary alarm, and purporting to be official documents of the Board, when in fact they have not been considered at all by that body. It was not designed by this action to prevent the publication of the regular proceedings of the Board, nor to withhold from the public necessary or important information, but simply to prevent the exaggerated statements of irresponsible persons in regard to prevalent diseases, appearing with an apparent official sanction. The sensational of some papers that the Board has enjoined secrecy upon its officers for the purpose of perpetrating gross frauds is too shallow to deserve notice. The Board of Health has earned a reputation for honesty which places its acts above even the suspicion of dishonesty.

Festival at the Orphans' Home and Asylum.

Yesterday a fair and festival were held at the Orphans' Home and Asylum of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Forty-ninth-street. A very large number of visitors were present during the day, and the fair was well patronized. The children, about 144 in number, assembled in their school rooms and amused themselves by singing, recitations and various games. During the year sixty-four children were admitted to the institution, thirty-two were placed out, thirty-one were returned to friends, and one died. The current expenses of the year were $14,816 25, and the current receipts $13,826 64. The trustees' account, however, shows on hand $69,600 in marketable securities. Mrs. EUGENE DUTILH is First Directress of the Home, and Miss MARY E. JONES, of No. 245 Fifth-avenue, Treasurer.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The Real Estate Exchange presented a lively appearance yesterday, the large room being entirely filled with speculators who had been attracted hither by the announcements of important sales by several of the leading auctioneers of the place. Two sales of ROBERTS & McGUIRE were adjourned, and yet three auctioneers simultaneously "called the attention" of the crowd for more than an hour to the valuable property which they had to dispose of.

MULLER, WILKINS & CO. disposed of a large amount of City improved property, consisting of down-town stores and dwelling houses, and up-town residences and vacant lots.

A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO. sold a large number of lots in Harlem and other up-town localities. The bidding on this property showed considerable spirit, and fair prices were obtained. On First avenue, in Harlem, corner lots—as, for instance, on the northwest corner of One Hundred and Fifteenth-street and the northeast corner of One Hundred and Eighteenth-street—brought upwards of $6,000 each, while lots on the same avenue, in the middle of the block, sold for about $3,000. On the cross streets from $1,600 to $2,500 were obtained for single lots; the particulars are given in the schedule below. The same firm sold two lots on the south side of Sixty-fourth street, about the first street of the Boulevard with Ninth-avenue. These brought $6,100 each. Lots have been sold in the same vicinity for upwards of $10,000. They also disposed of a narrow brick building, three stories high and 184 feet long by eleven feet wide, in the rear of Nos. 34, 36, 38 Water-street, between Hudson and Varick. The building is reached from the street by an alley, through which there is a perpetual right of way, and is divided on the ground floor into twelve stables by brick partitions. The upper part is used as a carpentry shop, and the whole rents for $1,476 a year. This property was sold in fee simple, with a mortgage of $4,000, which is allowed to run on, and brought $6,325.

A large portion of the crowd gathered around the stand of JOHNSON & MILLER, which is never occupied except for business. This firm sold a large number of Prospect Park lots, for which there was quite a spirited competition, and which brought good prices. The particulars will be found below.

To-day MULLER, WILKINS & CO. will dispose of a large amount of valuable property, including that at the south-west corner of Grand and Green streets, 50 by 98 feet. Other sales will be made by E. H. LUDLOW & CO., A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., JOHNSON & MILLER, and ROBERTS & McGUIRE.

TAXES IN MOUNT VERNON.

Indignation Meeting of Citizens last Evening—Resolutions and a Lively Debate—Opposition to the Assessment for a Boulevard.

A meeting of the citizens of Mount Vernon or East Chester, was held last evening to take action with reference to the proposed tax to be assessed in order to cover the expenses incident to the construction of a boulevard through a portion of the town.

The meeting was a very large one. Mr. JOHN STEVENS was elected Chairman and Mr. J. S. WOOD Secretary. Mr. STEVENS made a few remarks to the effect that he had given up attending public meetings in East Chester, as they were characterized by so much discord. He would, however, try and do justice to all.

The call for the meeting was then read by the Secretary and was adopted with but one negative voice.

Mr. BABCOCK then offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Chairman of this meeting appoint a committee of five persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and ascertain the amount of the indebtedness of the town, whether in bonds or otherwise; for what purpose such indebtedness was contracted, and, if possible, to ascertain the owners and holders of all the bonds of this town now outstanding; to ascertain when and from whom such bonds were purchased, at what price they were disposed of, and the amount of money received and expended at the time of purchase; to examine the books, papers and accounts of the Supervisor and Town Clerk of the town of East Westchester, with power appertaining to the issuing of bonds or the expenditure of money; to investigate and ascertain in what manner the bonds are issued, when they are to become due, and also if there are proper vouchers for the payment of the money; the Supervisor and Town Clerk upon which such bonds have been issued or money expended; to ascertain what amount of money has been spent on each separate road now being worked in the town; to report to the Town Clerk of Chester by Commissioners appointed by the Legislature, and how much more will be needed to complete the same; to ascertain, if possible, from the said Commissioners whether the bids accepted by them were the lowest presented to them, and also to find out whether the work has been done according to contract.

He explained that this meeting was called in the interest of the taxpayers. He had tried to ascertain the indebtedness of the Town Clerk, and found that there had been issued $116,500 of the town's bonds, of which the Supervisor and the Town Clerk claimed that $28,000 had been destroyed. The law legalizing the issue of those bonds allowed only for $88,000, leaving $16,000 unaccounted for.

At this point occurred great confusion. Amid the cheers and stamping a gentleman moved that the Supervisor be allowed to speak. The Supervisor explained that it was a matter of perfect indifference to him. Being invited to the platform, however, Mr. E. D. LAWRENCE said that though he might not be pleased to see him yet he was proud to be with them. With regard to the bonds, he would remind the audience that he had given security for the faithful discharge of his duty. He had paid out $10,400 on the Boston Road, and $56,000 for Westchester and First-street. The rest was in his hands. Would any gentleman like to question him? He had understood that he was accused of being the father of the Boston Post Road bill. That was a lie. He feared no one. The bonds he had issued he was obliged to issue. His conscience told him that he was right. He had prevented the obnoxious bill and kept out everything that was wrong in it. His principle was, "the greatest good for the greatest number." He wanted them to stop crying, "Wolf! wolf!" when there was only a mouse in the road. He dared and defied them to prove anything.

Mr. WOOD, in response to his invitation, would like to ask one or two questions.

Mr. LAWRENCE said he had agreed to answer any gentleman, not any one.

Mr. WOOD took his seat.

Mr. BABCOCK, saw by the spirit of the meeting that they thought he had offered his resolution in a vindictive spirit. He had no such feelings. He had access to the Town Clerk, the Supervisor, the town's indebtedness, and the Town Clerk did not know anything about it. Why did then? He wanted the officers, if they were honest men, to justify themselves. He moved the previous question on his resolution, which was carried.

Mr. CRAWFORD offered a resolution of thanks to Mr. HOPKINS, which was adopted, together with the following:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this meeting, all bonds issued in the name of this town should bear interest from the date on which they are or are to be issued, and that the action of the Supervisor in issuing the bonds for the Old White Plains road, so that they bear interest from Aug. 1, 1869, no matter how long after that they may be issued, and levying upon the taxable property of the town $1,750 for interest on the whole amount of said bonds, when only one-third of them had been issued, is hereby disapproved and requires investigation.

A gentleman present spoke at length on the history of the Blood Creek improvement and the origin of the present difficulty. The Chair announced that the Committee under Mr. BABCOCK'S resolution was Messrs. Marston, Anderson, Atkinson, Wood and Jones.

The following form of a petition was adopted after considerable debate:

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New-York, assembled:

The undersigned citizens and taxpayers of the town of East Chester, through which the Boston post road runs, would respectfully remonstrate against the passage of the bill introduced into the Legislature by Hon. E. D. LAWRENCE, asking an additional appropriation of the sum of $25,000 for title and other doubtful and additional powers to widen, build bridges, take lands, in short do everything that is enabling in the bill of last year. Your petitioners would then ask that all the Commissioners be by act, regulate, grade or macadamize roads in the town of East Chester, appointed by the Supervisor, be abolished, as people generally in now given to understand, at large, to our local officers to carry out all the improvements the people may desire.

A gentleman said he was present to oppose Captain LAWRENCE, or any one else who was ready to saddle on the community any measure not sanctioned by a majority in the town of Mamaroneck. (A voice: "Well done, honest Jaga.") The Commissioners had paid for work about ten times as much as it was worth. He read from the legislative records to show that the bill in question was introduced by Mr. LAWRENCE, referred to the Committee on Internal Affairs and reported back to the House. (Mr. LAWRENCE had denied this.) People had been imposed upon in the matter of the boulevard. He spoke at some length.

Mr. MCCORMICK, the Engineer of the road, spoke in defence of the Commissioners, and Mr. WOOD and others answered him, and amid considerable noise the meeting finally adjourned.

Reception of Palestine Commandery.

The reception of Palestine Commandery No. 18, of Knights Templar of this City, took place last evening at Apollo Hall. The attendance was large, and the room was beautifully draped with banners and other insignia of the Order. The music was by BERGERON'S orchestra. The inspection and grand review, which was the great feature of the evening, came off at 11:30 P. M., in which about three hundred Sir Knights participated, under command of Sir Knight THEODORE H. TILTON, Captain-General of Palestine Commandery. The evolutions were of an unusual order, and were gone through with a precision and perfection which speaks well for the character of the organization and the efficiency of the officer in charge. The officers of the Grand Commandery of the State were present in honor, and the staff officers consisted of the following Sir Knights: Henry C. Preston, Grand Commander; Charles Room, Chief of Staff; John H. Lefferts, Past Grand Commander; Robert Macoy, Grand Recorder; Robert Black, Grand Warder; Frederick E. The affair was an eminently successful one and thoroughly enjoyed by all participating in it.

Rumored Changes in the Erie Railway.

Rumors were circulated in Jersey City yesterday that some notable changes were taking place or were about to take place among the Erie Railway officials. According to the reports, Superintendent BUCKBEE was about to be suspended, as well as the Chief Engineer. The successor of the present incumbent of the latter office, according to the rumor, was to be JAMES FISK, Jr. So far as the removal or resignation of Mr. BUCKBEE is concerned, the rumor appears to had some foundation. Intimations have been given from the headquarters of the Company, in Twenty-Third-street, showing that the resignation of Mr. BUCKBEE is being considered, and leading to the belief also that other sweeping changes are to be made.

De Garmo's Receptions.

The receptions yesterday at Mr. DE GARMO'S Dancing Academy, No. 22 Fifth-avenue, were brilliant affairs, and numerously attended by his friends, patrons and pupils. The third dance on the programme was a galop, composed by WIEGANDT, and the sixth, the De Garmo Lancers. In the evening at the soirée, the order of dancing was more extended, and to the new dances of the day were added a galop, "The Boston," by ADOLPH BARNEKOW, and the Zeta Pi Galop.
